$100M Loan

B.C. Hydro has borrowed $100 million from Saudi Arabian sources, Hydro chairman Jim Rhodes announced today.

The transaction was arranged through Credit Suisse White Weld Ltd., underwriters in London, England, and the deal was closed Tuesday in London.

The Times learned of the loan Tuesday, but Rhodes, Finance Minister Dave Stupich and Premier Barrett all refused comment at the time.

It was uncertain until today whether the deal would go through in the light of the NDP defeat last week. Hydro previously arranged two $100 million loans from Arab sources and Social Credit leader Bill Bennett was highly critical of the overseas deals.

Bennett could not be contacted today for comment on the now-complete deal, and Socred party leader Peter Hyndman said the premier-elect will not make any comment until the new cabinet is sworn in and the new government has made a review of the financial status of the province.

The funds, in Canadian currency, have now been received from the Saudi Arabian sources, through the London underwriters, Rhodes said. The Arab country responsible for the previous bond issues was not revealed.

Rhodes said the proceeds of the new bond issue will be added to Hydro's general funds and used to finance a portion of its capital expenditure program.

Rate for the bond issue is 9¾ per cent with interest payable semi-annually. The first $50 million is due Dec. 16, 1980 and the remaining $50 million is due Dec. 16, 1981.

B.C. Hydro first borrowed $100 million in petrodollars last December. The deal was handled through the First Boston Corp. of New York and part of the agreement stipulated the identity of the Arab nation was to be kept secret.

In February the provincial government negotiated another $100 million bond sale on the overseas market.

Eight Still on the Loose

WONNACOTT

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Eight of 10 inmates are still on the loose after the biggest jail break in Victoria's history Tuesday night.

The 10 — awaiting trial on various charges — presumably used their bare hands to pry open two bars at Wilkinson Road jail before crawling through a 10-inch by 18-inch hole and dropping 15 feet to the ground.

The window, in the jail's east wing, is believed to have been the same one from which 19-year-old Danny Cain escaped last Spring.

Two of the escapers were caught two hours after the breakout discovered by guards at 10:40 p.m. They have been identified as Donald William Thomson, 42, and Kenneth Moorehouse, 58, and were to appear in Victoria provincial court this afternoon.

Six of the inmates still at large are known drug users and four are considered dangerous. Police warn the fugitives will probably try to get armed.

"We're bracing for another wave of crime," moaned one Victoria police officer. "Someone's going to get seriously hurt by all these people escaping from jail."

Hal McGillivray, director of the provincial corrections on Vancouver Island said the escape points out as never before the need for a new remand centre.

He said the present building, built before the First World War is too old, too decrepid to provide the kind of security needed. "Even the concrete is starting to crumble in this place," he said.

Meanwhile police on Vancouver Island have mounted one of the largest searches ever for the prisoners still at large: Larry Alan Preston, 32, Gerald Paul Ritchie, 29, William Paul Murray, 27, Lawrence Stanley Shisler, 31, Tom Edward Wonnacott, 28, Glen John Glowa, 27, Peter George MacLean, 24, and William Harold Mack, 26. All were wearing green prison garb when last seen.

Preston and MacLean were awaiting trial on charges of breaking and entering, Ritchie for theft, Murray for drug conspiracy, Shisler and

FRENCH-ONLY FACE PENALTY

OTTAWA (CP) — Treasury Board President Jean Chretien told reporters Tuesday that bilingual civil servants in Quebec who refuse to serve taxpayers in English and French will be penalized. He did not elaborate.

Chretien was commenting on reports that 25,000 Quebec members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada plan to refuse to speak English starting Jan. 2 to press demands for a seven-per-cent bonus to civil servants required to work in both languages.

"The public is entitled to receive their services in the two official languages," he said.

Squeaky Gets Life

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme today was sentenced to life in prison for attempting to assassinate President Ford.

U.S. district court judge Thomas Macbride handed down the maximum sentence after rejecting motions by her defence attorney for a new trial.

Miss Fromme, a devoted apostle of imprisoned mass killer Charles Manson, is the first person convicted and sentenced under a 1965 federal law of attempting to murder a president of the United States.

Miss Fromme screamed and shouted at Macbride before he pronounced the sentence and hit U.S. attorney Dwayne Keyes with an apple. She shouted as marshals carried her bodily out of the courtroom.

Macbride told Miss Fromme that he had searched in vain for any mitigating circumstances under which he could ease the sentence.

Bennett, Barrett Talk

B.C.'s new premier met the outgoing premier for about 30 minutes Tuesday in preparation for Monday morning's transfer of power.

Premier Barrett said the meeting was "frank and fruitful" and the two leaders exchanged opinions.

Asked if they offered each other any advice, Barrett said: "No, we each have our own problems."

Earlier, premier-elect Bill Bennett was seen emerging from the meeting but asked by reporters if he had met Barrett yet he said only that he had met the premier several times since 1973.

Bennett had no comments for reporters other than to say a member of his cabinet will go to Ottawa to discuss the anti-inflation program and the ramifications in B.C.

He said notices of ICBC premium increases would be delayed until the new cabinet had time to study them. The outgoing NDP cabinet was to give final approval to the rate increases this week but postponed approval pending transfer of the government.

The NDP caucus — new members as well as some of the defeated MLAs — met for two hours during the afternoon to discuss administrative details.

Barrett gave reporters little clue of what happened at the meeting except to say the MLAs had tidied up their restaurant bills.

His leadership was not discussed, he said, adding that he will make no decision on his future until the final outcome of the Coquitlam race is known.

Barrett now trails Socred George Kerster by 117 votes but there is a chance the outcome could be changed with a recount and the additon of section 80 votes (from people not on the voters' lists).

Asked if the meeting was bitter, Barrett said "certainly not, it was all NDPers."

Barrett is expected to submit his government's resignation to Lieutenant-Governor Walter Owen at 10 a.m. Monday.

Bennett has already picked his cabinet ministers but won't name them until they are sworn in Monday, which is customary.

PWA Chief Watson Rejects Two Top Air Canada Jobs

VANCOUVER (CP) — Donald Watson, president and chief executive officer of Pacific Western Airlines, said Tuesday that he turned down an offer to take either of the two top jobs at Air Canada.

Watson said he had sent a telegram to transport minister Otto Lang pointing out his reasons for turning down an offer Lang had made to him Dec. 10 in Ottawa.

The telegram said Watson had compelling reasons to refuse both jobs — chairman of the board or president and chief executive officer.

Yves Pratte, one of two men rapped Dec. 8 by Chief Justice Willard Estey of the Supreme Court of Ontario in his 312-page report on Air Canada, resigned as chairman of the publicly-owned, airline Nov. 28.

"One never expects such an opportunity and only a few ever receive it," Watson said.

"The decision process would have been simplified had there been any doubt in my mind about my ability to make that substantial contribuiton.

Watson is a long-term airline career man, having been with PWA for 18 years, the last five as president and chief executive officer.

"The entire air transportation industry is very fragile and is enduring turbulent times," Watson also said in the telegram.

"I see little relenting in that atmosphere for the next several years . . . I must forego further consideration of one of the greatest opportunities ever afforded anyone, to remain with Pacific Western."

WORKERS SAY RATS TO SMELL OF CATS

LIVERPOOL, England (Reuter) — About 600 men at an automobile factory here were made idle today because of the smell of stray cats.

The dispute at the factory, which makes British Leyland's best-selling export sports car, the Triumph Bullet, began on Monday when 21 workers complained about the smell of cats around the plant.

Cleaners scrubbed the floor —but the men protested it was still wet and dangerous to work on.

The 21 began a strike when the management refused their demand to be paid for time lost while the floor dried.

So far 600 have been laid off, and there is fear that unless the strike is settled soon it will halt all production at the factory.

LONGER TERM FOR CURBS?

TORONTO (CP) — The CBC says it has learned the federal government's anti-inflation legislation may remain in effect longer than the originally-announced three-year period.

The CBC, which does not indicate how long the controls will be effective, also says the program will be more complex than originally planned.

B.C. Tel Rates Going Up Jan. 1

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Telephone Co. today announced rate increases for 1976, raising the rental charge for residential phone users in the province between 10 cents and 25 cents a month.

The new rates, which will be formally filed with the Canadian Transport Commission (CTC) Friday, come into effect Jan. 1 and fall within the federal government's anti-inflation guidelines, the company said in a news release.

In Vancouver, the residential rental will rise to $7.90 from its current rate of $7.65-a-month. Victoria subscribers will pay $6.50, compared with the current rate of $6.35.

Rental rates for individual business phones will increase between 40 cents and $1.75-a-month, depending on the exchange.

The company said the new rates also will affect long distance calls within B.C., service connection charges and rates for extension phones.

Included in the rate increases announced today, B.C. Tel is introducing a 50-cent charge on each uncompleted person-to-person or collect call in excess of five per month made by a subscriber.

There will be a mihimum charge of 20 cents for each long distance call placed at any time and a special rate for most station-to-station calls made and paid for in coin telephones.

There will be increased discounts for most evening and late night long distance calls in the company's operating area and the periods in which these discounts apply have been extended.

Ottawa Set to Study Battered Baby Cases

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government is prepared to spend money and time on research to define child abuse and prevent it from spreading, Health Minister Marc Lalonde and Solicitor-General Warren Allmand said Tuesday.

But before any definite pledges are made, they said, the facts have to be gathered.

Both Mr. Allmand and Mr. Lalonde told the Commons health and welfare committee they have some possible answers but each cited contradictory studies, inadequate research and the fear and ignorance of the public as major obstacles to overcome.

Saying it is difficult to define child abuse and separate it from child neglect or battering, Mr. Lalonde said that 68,000 children in the custody of welfare officials in Canada as of June, 1975 were victims of neglect—wilful or unintentional maltreatment.

He said that in 1973-74, the number of abused or battered children in Canada totalled 1,085. In legal terms abuse usually includes physical attack, severe discipline such as lengthy solitary confinement, the deprivation of basic needs like food, or any other action that could cause physical or mental damage to a child.

Battering usually means intentional physical harm, he said.

Mr. Allmand expanded those definitions to include sexual abuse and noted that Mr. Lalonde's figures included only reported cases.

"Conservative estimates of the actual number of cases in Canada put the figure between 3,000 and 4,000 per year," he said.

Both cited the need for a strong reporting system under which people would not be afraid to report cases of child abuse.

In most provinces, such reporting is mandatory. But people still unjustly fear legal reprisals, unpleasant involvement in legal action or damaging personal or professional relationships, he said.

"Child abuse is a criminal act by anybody's definition," Mr. Allmand said in a brief to the committee, but both ministers said changes to the Criminal Code would not put an end to it.

Mr. Allmand cited Section 43 of the Criminal Code which allows schoolteachers, parents or persons replacing parents to use force to discipline a child "if the force does not exceed what is reasonable under the circumstances."

Mr. Allmand said up to Nov. 30 of this year, 590 such

An Unhappy Christmas for Many Tots

MIAMI (AP) — The Christmas holiday season is supposed to be a time of cheer, but it's also the time when child abuse is most rampant, child-care workers warn.

Officials said Tuesday that more than 300 hospital reports of child abuse have been filed in Florida for the first 15 days of December, as opposed to 420 reports for all of November. They say the increase in child abuse as the holidays approach is a trend throughout the U.S.

"There has always been a big increase of child abuse around holidays," said Dr. Irwin Redlener, a pediatrician.

Dr. Redlener attributed the increase to emotional stress during the holidays coupled with the current economic problems.

Alberta Murphy, a state welfare worker, agreed the economy plays a large role.

"There's not enough money and there's a little too much holiday cheer—alcohol," she said, adding that emotional problems are compounded during Christmas.

"People have unhappy memories of things that happened in the past during the holidays," she said.

Dr. Redlener suggested that parents recognize outside pressures, remember that unchecked physical punishment can result in serious injuries to children and seek help if they fear "things are getting out of control."

Child Abuse

acts "beyond reasonable force" were committed in Ontario alone and eight of those resulted in the death of the child.

Both ministers agreed that diagnosis and treatment of child abuse is of secondary importance to its prevention.

Mr. Allmand said a number of experimental projects, including family-based treatment units and crisis centres where families, parents or children can retreat temporarily, are in their early stages. Budgetary cutbacks in some social service ministries, such as in Ontario, have forced a shutdown of some of those projects, he added.

But Mr. Lalonde said money could be found to identify potential problems and to provide self-help, or child care course, and improved social services under provisions of the proposed social services act. The act will extend federal-provincial cost-sharing plans to community-based programs.

Season's Greetings From the Taxman . . .

OTTAWA (FP) — Canadian taxpayers are getting a Christmas present from their federal government that they would like to forget.

The mail this month in addition to bringing in the usual Christmas greetings is also delivering millions of personal income tax forms.

If anything is calculated to put a damper on the Christmas spirit it is receiving the detailed income tax forms.

Bill Clarke (PC — Vancouver-Quadra) enquired in the Commons Tuesday why National Revenue Minister Jack Cullen saw fit to plug the Christmas mails with the personal income tax forms.

He said they are not needed for several weeks yet and most Canadians would rather forget about paying income taxes at Christmas.

Cullen said it was an indication of "how efficient" his department has become.

"We want to send the material out as soon as we can, so that people can see how easy it is to fill out income tax forms," he said.

There were groans from both sides of the house.

Spill: One Oil Patch Remains

An elusive patch of oil from an industrial accident at Bamberton was discovered Tuesday by cleanup crews about a mile from B.C. Cement works where several hundred gallons of bunker fuel overflowed into Saanich Inlet on Monday.

Plant manager Sal Sala said the oil was spotted by a boat crew southeast of the plant toward Finlayson Arm. It had escaped notice in air and sea watches the previous day when the main body of oil was contained by two floating booms.

"We had one small patch we were trying to contain (Tuesday)," Sala said, expecting this to be done today.

There are 30 men and four boats employed in the clean-up, using rakes, absorbent material and sieves. When the free patch is trapped attention will be devoted to the main body for final disposal, Sala said.

The situation is being monitored by the Provincial Emergency Program, fish and wildlife inspectors and the federal Environment Protection Service. Sala said there is no suggestion of damage to marine life and no indication of oil on the beach.

He said the spill occurred at the company's dock at high tide. An overflow valve that should have carried excess oil from a holding tank to another tank did not operate, causing the heavy fuel to spill over.

Sala said it was difficult to estimate the amount of oil lost because the works handles such large quantities, consuming 70,000-80,000 gallons a day in its huge roasting kilns.

Handling oil is such normal routine that the plant is both expert at it and aware of the hazards. But although Bamberton has a good record in this regard, Sala said next year's capital budget was to include the cost of installing a retaining wall around the fuel depot as a precaution against what happened Monday.

He said it was ironic that the accident had beaten the company to the draw.

Porter's Remarks

PARIS (CP) — U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger said today he did not authorize recent outspoken remarks on U.S.-Canadian relations by the U.S. ambassador in Ottawa, William Porter.

In a half-hour meeting with External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen, Kissinger said he could not explain Porter's comments that relations had worsened because of Canadian nationalism. The secretary's reaction was described to reporters by a Canadian official.

After the meeting, Kissinger refused to comment on the Porter issue. He added that relations between the United States and Canada "are excellent."

MacEachen said relations "are in better shape now than in the past."

In a joint statement, the two men said Ottawa and Washington will continue consultation and negotiation "which will enable us to surmount the inevitable economic strains that arise from time to time between these two major economics."

Porter, who is about to be transferred to Saudi Arabia, was reported to have suggested that Prime Minister Trudeau and President Gerald Ford meet soon to resolve differences.

But the Canadian official said Kissinger told MacEachen "it would be a mistake to have a meeting because there is no important subject to raise."

In Ottawa Tuesday, Trudeau insisted that Porter was not expressing official views.

Ford authorized a statement in Washington that there are no problems the two countries cannot resolve.

AND, WHAT HAVE YOU DONE FOR THEM . . .?

OTTAWA (CP)—It was one of those rare times in the Commons when Prime Minister Trudeau appeared at a loss for words.

Steve Paproski (PC-Edmonton Centre) arose during the question period to ask:

"In view of the fact that there are only 15 days left before the end of International Women's Year, will the right honorable gentleman advise the house specifically what he has done for the women of this country during the past year?"

Despite cries of "let's hear it, Pierre," from Conservative benches, Trudeau remained in his seat without answering.

Mack for armed robbery and Wonnacott and Glowa for escaping from William Head last Nov. 26.

The latter two were recaptured Nov. 28 after a high speed chase in Sidney. Some knives and an axe were found under the front of their car.

Saanich police believe there may be a connection between the escape and reports of three cars stolen overnight.

A spokesman said a 1966 blue Mini Mipor B.C. licence SBC 900 was taken from the 700 block Rogers, a 1972 green ford Torino, B.C. licence PRG 854 taken from the 400 block Carey and this morning police received a report of a 1964 Chevy Nova B.C. licence VJC 797 stolen from a parking lot at Burnside and Qu'Appelle.

Anyone seeing the cars is asked to contact police and keep well away.

McGillivray said an inquiry is being held today into the escape.

He noted that at the time there were 46 prisoners in the east wing which is divided into two sections. In the section where the 10 men broke out, 14 other inmates opted to remain in their cells.

He said it took guards about 20 minutes to identify just who was missing, then Saanich police were alerted.

Sixteen police cars, nine from Saanich, one from Victoria, two from Central Saanich, and five from Colwood RCMP converged on the scene and together with 15 corrections staff members patrolled the area in the vicinity of the jail throughout the night.

A Saanich police spokesman said officers checked at nearby houses and in one learned two of the men had been visiting and just left.

An intensive search of the area resulted in the arrest at about 12:30 a.m. of Thomson and Moorehouse at the rear of Spectrum School. They offered no resistance.

Both police and McGillivray refused to speculate on whether the escapers might have had outside help.

A police investigation is continuing today into the disappearance of William Head inmate David Edward Bryden who went missing Monday.

the weather

Sections of the southwestern and southeastern corners of British Columbia were under clear skies overnight. Elsewhere skies were cloudy with occasional rain along the north coast and the occasional light snow in the Interior. A ridge of high pressure continues as the dominant feature over B.C. A Pacific disturbance pushing eastward through the ridge is weakening. However, enough moisture is associated with the system to produce clouds over much of the province but only spotty precipitation is anticipated with most of it occurring over the north coast. The system will gradually ease its way through B.C. today. Some clearing is expected behind it before another Pacific disturbance moves onto the coast Thursday.

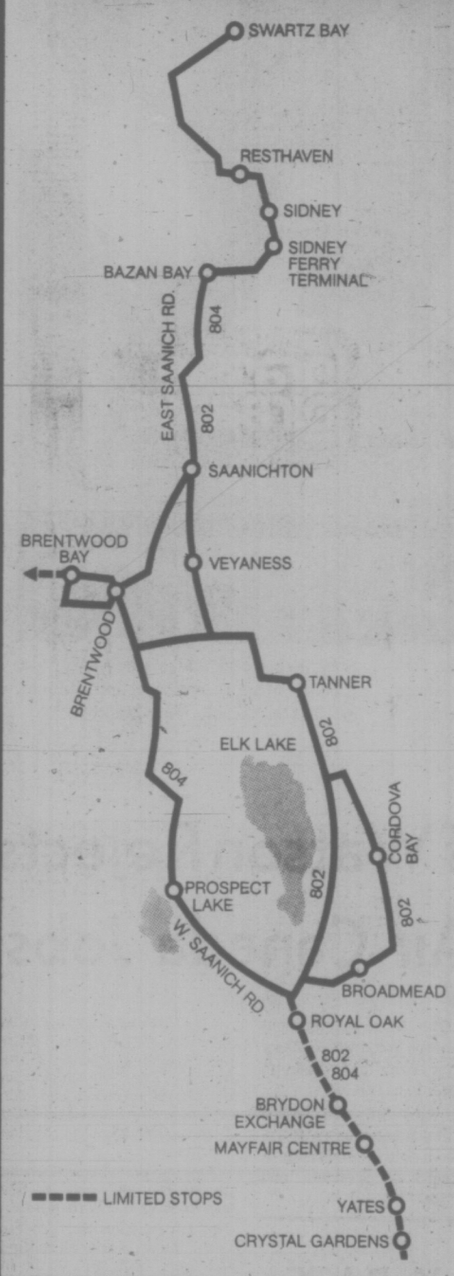
TRANSIT BULLETIN 6

IMPROVED TRANSIT SERVICE IN THE SAANICH PENINSULA



First stage commences December 19

On December 19, a number of improvements will take place in transit service on the Saanich Peninsula. The present service operated by the provincially-owned Vancouver Island Transit Limited will be increased, with two rush-hour trips being offered in both the morning and evening. Saturday schedules will be improved and, for the first time, evening trips will be run.

Several routes are available for use by Saanich Peninsula residents. The basic day long service is provided by a general purpose route numbered 802, calling at Royal Oak, Cordova Bay, Saanichton, Sidney, Swartz Bay, and intermediate points. Some 802 trips will run via Brentwood and some via Veyaness.
A separate Route 804 will offer a Brentwood-Prospect Lake-Victoria shopper schedule.

FERRY CONNECTIONS

An important element in the design of the new schedules has been connections with ferry services. Combined bus and ferry journeys will be possible on at least some trips on each of the following runs: Brentwood-Mill Bay; Swartz Bay-Saltspring; Swartz Sidney-Anacortes.

STOPS

For the moment, the present informal stop arrangements that exist on the Peninsula north of Royal Oak will remain in effect. Passengers wishing to board or alight should select a safe place and signal the driver well in advance. South of Royal Oak in the built-up area of Greater Victoria, stops will be made at posted bus stops along Douglas north of the Trans-Canada Highway, and at the following locations: Brydon Exchange, Mayfair Shopping Centre, and at all FastBUS stops in downtown Victoria to the terminus on Belleville west of the Crystal Gardens.

Destination signs on the buses will continue to show the ultimate destinations. Card signs in the front window will display the route number.

FARES

No changes are to be made in the fare structure. A thorough-going streamlining of fares, along with transfer privileges with B.C. Hydro, is presently under review. Patrons are reminded that, while exact change is not mandatory on Vancouver Island Transit Ltd. buses, it is appreciated since it speeds service for everyone.

Canada's Split Role Highlights Session

PARIS (CP) — Canadian Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie told the international energy and resources conference today that his country "has a dual economic identity" as both an industrial country and a raw materials exporter.

As an industrial power, Canada had an interest in low and stable prices for the commodities, capital and technology it imports.

But as a major commodity exporter, it shared with many poor countries an interest in profitably high world prices for raw materials.

"From this perspective, Canada has a particularly important stake in the outcome of this conference"

Gillespie was among the last of the 27 participants to address the conference, which appeared headed for an early conclusion today.

Its main achievement is to be the establishment of four commissions to study energy, raw materials, development and finance. Canada is expected to be on the energy and development bodies.

Gillespie told a news conference the energy commisson, including oil producers, consumers and poor countries, should "break new ground" in finding new international policies on oil and other energy sources.

The other three commissions, he said, should act as catalysts to stimulate work by groups such as United Nations agencies, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

The success of the meeting depends on how the producers and the rich industrial consumers can reconcile their differences.

U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger called for several measures to help poor countries meet oil bills that have depleted their meagre financial reserves and jeopardized their development programs.

Speaking for the EEC, Italian Foreign Minister Mariano Rumor said a new world economic system must be forged though co-operation between rich and poor countries.

Canadian External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen, one of two conference chairmen, told delegates at the closed-door meeting that "the consequences of inaction could be grave indeed."

He said the meeting "is the beginning of a crucial dialogue aimed at establishing a sound basis for economic co-operation which will make it possible for all of our countries to face the future with confidence."

Iran Rebuke for Kissinger

PARIS (CP) — Iran rejected today an assertion by U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger that the oil-producing countries are mostly responsible for the financial bind of the poor nations.

Iranian Interior Minister Jamshid Amouzegar told the conference on international economic co-operation that the industrialized West is responsible.

Amouzegar led off the oil producers' response to Kissinger's statement Tuesday on the first day of the conference.

Kissinger said "the energy crisis has dealt a serious blow to global stability and prosperity" and the oil producers must therefore bear most of the burden of helping the poor nations with their balance-of-payments deficits.

But Amouzegar told the foreign ministers and high officials of the 27 participants:

"The staggering deficits in the payment balances of the developing countries in 1975 and beyond cannot be simply or simplisitically blamed on any one factor — certainly not the oil-price rise."

"Their financial difficulties result mainly from inadequacies of export earnings, accelerated inflation and deepened recession in the West."

An Undiplomatic Goodbye

Critical parting shots from ambassadors are considered churlish behavior in diplomatic circles. So when the retiring U.S. ambassador leaves in an apparent huff, Canadians can be sure that all is not well between our two countries. U.S. resentment over restrictions on foreign investment here, deletion of U.S. commercials from American border channels piped into Canada, higher prices for Canadian resources, proposed nationalization of the Saskatchewan potash industry and a host of other irritants were bound to surface sooner or later.

What is interesting is how they came into public view. No ambassador launches public criticism of his hosts unless he has consulted his own government, not unless he wants to find himself third secretary in Ruritania. Nor would an ambassador say nasty things publicly unless he had said similar things to the host government in private. This suggests that Ottawa ignored or at least hedged on some of the U.S. bilateral concerns. For a retiring ambassador to shake his finger publicly may be dirty pool, but it is a measure of how seriously the U.S. views potential disagreements. Undoubtedly the ambassador's words have left the secrecy oriented Canadian External Affairs department seething. Such a thing just isn't done.

Before our nascent nationalism bubbles to the fore, Canadians should remember that we have a habit of criticizing Americans for everything from moon shots to morals. Are we to scream or wring our hands when they take their own cunning shots?

The timing of the ambassador's outburst is also interesting. In the next 10 days two U.S. congressional committees will discuss the Canadian-U.S. auto pact — a bone of contention in the U.S. — and Ottawa's new foreign investment rules. The message is plain enough: mend our ways or expect retaliation.

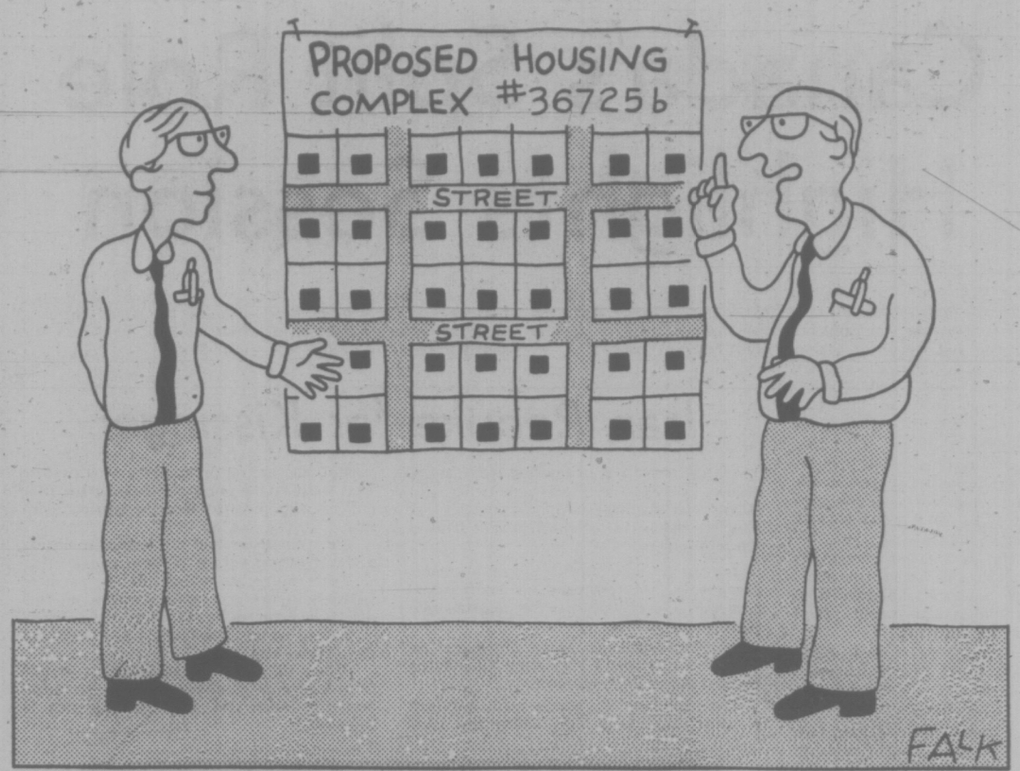
Prime Minister Trudeau was equally blunt in replying to Ambassador William Porter's remarks. To say that Porter's remarks went well beyond the bounds within which an ambassador should stay is the equivalent of a rude "none of your business." In the House of Commons, the prime minister made a point of adding, "We are not a colony of the U.S.," to the general applause of honorable members. Brave words.

But it will take more than rhetoric and stout retorts to convince the U.S. that we are serious about our economic independence. For too long a slight twist of the Canadian arm in private brought an obsequious public response. Why should the U.S. think any different now? They are dealing with the same government. Porter is correct when he says a meeting between Trudeau and U.S. President Gerald Ford should take place. It is up to Trudeau to convince the U.S. that the change is psychological as well as governmental.

During U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's recent Ottawa visit he endorsed the so-called "new relationship" between our two countries. In simple terms that means the U.S. considers Canada an equal. If we are to seek contractual links with the European Economic Community and other "third options," a favorite phrase of the Trudeau administration, Yankee traders can not be expected to give Canadian products the special consideration of old.

Canadians appear ready to accept the consequences of a more independent stand, in that a solid majority supports Ottawa's hesitant nationalistic moves. It is indicative of the current economic mood that when the ambassador said the British Columbia NDP defeat would ease U.S.-Canadian tensions, Dr. Pat McGeer (SC—Vancouver-Point Grey) jumped in with a statement that a Socred government would not necessarily mean cheaper export gas prices.

The price of economic independence will be a lower standard of living, as the prime minister often tells us. Just how much materialism Canadians will sacrifice in the pursuit of an abstract value remains to be seen. If we don't give in to our jilted lover's siren calls now, stronger methods of persuasion will be forthcoming. That is how the game of life is played. The Americans have served us fair warning in a variety of ways. We must always remain fast friends but the days of dancing the continental are finished if we are to survive.



" . . . gads, Lewis! . . . separate dwellings on their own individual lots with back yards and sidewalks on paved streets intersecting at right angles! . . . I think you've come up with a solution to the housing crisis!"

Peculiar Moves

Isn't it high time that the opposition started to ask some questions of the federal government regarding the dispersal of French armed units in Canada, and bilingualism in general in our armed services? There seem to be some very peculiar moves afoot, that need explaining.

To start with, this over-emphasis on language has resulted in the retirement of numerous able, experienced anglophone officers. Many of these are still comparatively young, and knowledgeable in military matters, through action in the Second World War and the Korean war.

In addition, a military college like R.M.C. has been forced to arrange to have a 40 per cent francophone enrolment — this to satisfy the wishes, supposedly, of a minority that represents a total of not more than 25 per cent of the total population. Is the Quebec college reciprocating likewise?

We are now seeing the installation of francophone units in place of the originally anglophone ones in such military camps as at Greenwood, N.S. This is being done contrary to the wishes of the local English-speaking inhabitants. It will cause inconvenience, and added costs for such things as francophone education. In what places in Quebec are English units being so installed? None, as far as we know.

Perhaps nothing of a really serious nature may evolve from all this. This is by no means certain however, and does the majority of Canadians have to throw away all their cards with hardly a murmur from the politicians or news media? — S. S. McCatty, Ottawa.

Social Ownership

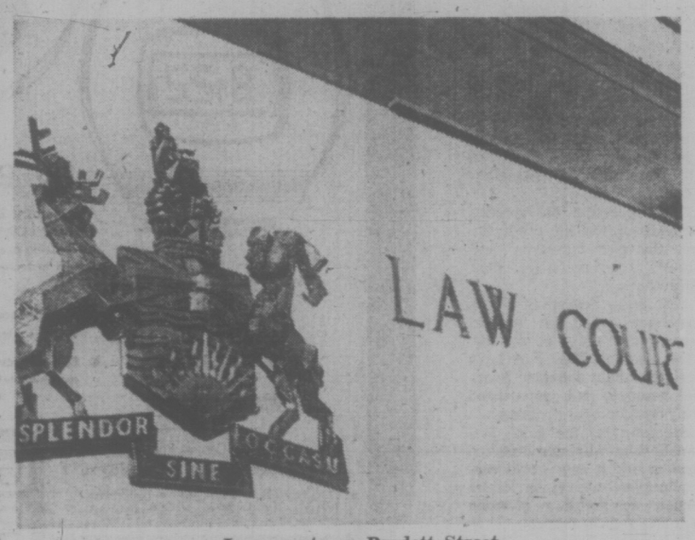
Because of high wages, workers are told, their industries cannot compete on the world market, hence the lack of markets and jobs. This shallow, one-sided reasoning is misleading. Capturing markets from competitors means an equivalent loss in markets to these competitors, and in jobs to workers they employ. It means a cutthroat struggle to see which industries get the markets, which workers get the jobs and which go without.

Viewed as a whole the problem is that the exploited working class gets, not too much, but too little, enough to buy back only a part of their product, a condition inherent in the capitalist profit system. It is this which creates unsold surpluses, restricted markets, and unemployment, and also the "export or die" rivalries for markets which are the root cause of modern wars. Only the social ownership and democratic worker control of the economy, based on democratic industrial representation, advocated by the Socialist Labor Party, wherein all workers will receive the full social equivalent of the wealth they produce, can solve these vital problems. — James Minal, 4950 Imperial Street.

Court Space

Twice recently I have been reported in your paper — incorrectly — as saying the provincial criminal courts will have less space in the law courts on Burdett Street than they now have on Fisgard Street. In fact, the present government plans call for them to have no less but no more space than they now have — three court rooms.

But three court rooms are not enough now and won't be enough a year or more from now when the move to Burdett Street takes place. Two examples of delays in the Courts will serve to illustrate the need for more space. Presently before the provincial criminal courts are four men charged with offences alleged to have occurred in October who must wait — in jail — until February for preliminary hearing — four months in jail before even being able to hear the prosecution's case against them. Another person—fortunately not detained in jail—is charged with an offence alleged to have been committed in April, was apprehended in August and is waiting for preliminary hearing now scheduled for next March — eleven months after the alleged offence and seven months after his first appearance before the court. Such delays do disservice to the public and the accused. The death or departure of even one witness may in some cases lead to the release of a person who could have and ought to have been convicted. An innocent citizen may be incarcerated for months before his day in court when he is found not guilty.



Law courts on Burdett Street.

The Superior Courts also need more court rooms. Presently in their temporary accommodation at St. Ann's Academy, the Supreme court and County court occupy five court rooms. When the renovations to the permanent Law Courts are completed, there will be only four Court Rooms for these Courts plus the Court of Appeal — one less court room and one more court.

The need for more court rooms is desperate yet the provincial government says the people of Victoria have enough court rooms for now and for years to come. More than $2 million is being spent on the Burdett Street Court House but all the people will see is three provincial courts moving from Fisgard Street to Burdett Street, but no more court rooms.

The government says delays are caused by improper management and use of court facilities, not lack of court space. Better management and use of facilities might lead to greater efficiency, to greater productivity of the Court system, to more instant justice but at what price? The Courts are not a production line, they do not manufacture widgets, efficiency is not the goal. They deal with the lives and liberties of individuals; they protect the freedoms and dignities of all citizens from infringement by others and by the state, they protect the very basis of our civilized way of life. They need sufficient facilities in which civil and criminal disputes can be settled in a calm, sober, dignified, fair and even inefficient way. The courts do not deal with chattels but with human beings.

The Victoria Bar Association has been arguing with the provincial government for months for more court rooms and facilities but so far, to no avail. The last meeting was September 17, 1975 and the government appears to have been reluctant to have any further meetings.— David R. Wilson, a member of the Victoria Bar Association.

'Y' English

We have a course at the "Y" designed to assist new Canadian women to learn English in a pleasant, social atmosphere, and with babysitting provided. So often the man of the house works in an English-speaking environment, older children go to English-speaking schools, while his wife stays home with younger children and has very little opportunity to improve her new language.

Through a special grant from the Vancouver Immigrant Services Society, we are able to offer a 14-week twice-weekly course, with babysitting included, for only $5.

Our difficulty arises in getting this information to the ladies most needing it — they don't read English! If you know of anybody in this situation — please put them in touch with us at the "Y" — 386-7511. — Rosemary C. Donald, Information Services Co-ordinator, YM and YWCA, 880 Courtney Street.

Gov't Can't Do All at Once

OTTAWA — On the same day recently that Finance Minister Donald Macdonald talked about all the money the federal government isn't going to spend next year, Treasury Board President Jean Chretien produced estimates in the House of Commons to cover an extra $1.75 billion that it is going to spend this year.

Chretien's figures are not, of course, the last we have heard about increased spending this year. There will be at least one more set of supplementary estimates followed at the last minute by a set of "final supplementaries." The government still has great scope to enlarge this inflation year's spending substantially and there is no doubt at all that it will do just that.

But next year everything is going to be different. Macdonald concedes that this year the government was all wrong in its assessment of economic conditions but . . . manana, manana.

Gov'ts Spend 40%

The Trudeau government's credibility on matters of this sort hardly exist so it must expect to be judged against the background of its own actions. Between the end of 1970 and early this year — that is, in just over four years — the government increased the size of the civil service by 26.6 per cent. This obviously is not a sustainable rate of increase. The most highly advertised of the government's ideas on trimming spending involves holding growth of the public service to 1.5 per cent annually — but after a four-year increase of more than one-quarter.

In the 10 years from 1965 to 1974, total government spending in Canada soared from 29.9 per cent of gross national product to 39.1 per cent. That, of course, reflects spending by municipal and provincial governments as well but it is necessary to recognize how large a portion of it is at the federal level.

It is also necessary to recognize that while this covers a 10-year period, the Trudeau administration has been in power since April 1968, that is for all but three of the vital years.

Even though much of the rise in spending for that 10-year period is accounted for by transfer payments to individuals or from the federal to provincial governments, the rate of increase is far beyond the capacity of either the country's economy or, equally important, our social order to sustain. If it were to continue at the rate of the recent past the element of state control — which becomes involved when spending reaches these levels — would be excessive.

It would not be accurate to say that further increases at about the same rate would produce a society akin to that in Czechoslovakia, but it would produce one unrecognizably changed from our existing one. Orwellian touches would be inevitable.

This is the sort of background, coupled with the acute economic difficulties of the present period, against which the government has produced a new housing program. In part, it involves simply a near-compulsory shift of a further $750 million by the lending institutions from other forms of investment to housing — near-compulsory for, while it is a request now, the threat of legislation has already been produced.

This is coupled with an elaborate program of subsidies, so extensive that one newspaper headlined its story on the scheme: "Everyone can get a subsidy." In the case of some, the subsidy would take the form of a loan to be interest free for five years and repayable after that. For others, depending on income and family size, it would be an outright grant. The purpose is to see that no one has to wait to buy a house.

There is a clear social need to ensure that a developing shortage of rental housing is reversed because it is the rental units which provide mobility — both physical and social. They are essential for people moving about, for newly-married people, for those waiting to buy a home.

But, during a period of acute inflation, why should there be a program to ensure that, as far as possible no one should have to wait to buy a home? Why should they not wait? In terms of the anti-inflation program such an extensive program of subsidization makes no sense at all. It encourages the tendency of which the prime minister complains most — the desire to have everything now.

Never before in our lifetime has it been thought to be a great hardship if people, adequately housed for the moment, have to wait for a time before they embark on such a major step as the purchase of a house for which they will be paying over the next quarter century.

At a time when interest rates are at astronomical levels, to wait a while is a very sensible, rational step. Yet it is the precise step the government itself is seeking to discourage.

To a large extent, the reason the civil service has grown so fast, the reason why spending has soared at levels far beyond the country's capacity to sustain such rates of growth, involves the worst defect of the Trudeau government. This is simply a conviction that has prevailed during most of the time it has been in power, with one brief interruption in 1969 and another promised now, that it can do everything at once. It has been one of the most unrealistic governments this country has ever been saddled with.

Lost Credibility

The prime minister seems to be driven by whims and caprice on one side — the heavy semi-personal spending on his residence, the refusal to bill the Liberal party for his political use of helicopters for which the public is compelled to pay. On the other, he reacts to pressures, not to cool and logical argument. This is a government which endlessly runs after events, trying to catch them up. It has long since lost control.

Unhappily, given its record, there is no reason to suppose that it really will regain control next year or even the year after that. It is far more likely to be chasing events then too. When an advocate with William Teron's current power in his multiplicity of roles at the CMHC and the urban affairs department puts forward a program that is badly related to the basic economic policies the administration claims to be following, it will simply forget its supposed compass bearing and jump.

The real problem facing this government and the country is that Pierre Trudeau and these ministers have lost so much credibility that it is now impossible to believe that tomorrow's performance will be better. We all know that there is no reason to suppose anything of the sort.

From the Times of December 17, 1915

"The nightmare of Germany is peace negotiation," said Grant Duncan, a businessman of London, England, associated with the textile industry, who passed through on the Makura last evening, routed through to New York. Mr. Duncan is in a good position to know the sentiment of central Europe, because he has travelled extensively and since January has made 16 business visits to France and Switzerland. "Everyone who has been travelling in Germany for the last few years before the war occurred knew that war was inevitable and the query passed from man to man when mobilization would come."

How the Grits Care for Their Own and Rule Forever

By ALLAN FOTHERINGHAM
Maclean's

So Franco is dead. There have been the usual moral cluck-cluckings from the editorial pages over the fact one regime ruled Spain for 36 years. What is strange is that no one draws the parallel with another regime that has dominated one country so thoroughly — the Liberal party of Canada. The Liberals have ruled Canada 38 of the past 49 years, 43 of the past 54. We all talk about Spain as the last great dictatorship, but is there any other "democratic" country in the world that has been dominated so completely by one party? The Liberals use a different method of sustaining themselves in power than Franco did, but it is just as successful and in its own way destroys the parliamentary system.

The Liberal method is to co-opt talent from the civil service, put it into political life, then return it safely to its own secure reward back in the civil service. It is Tinker to Evers to Chance, the taxpayer paying for it every step of the way. It accounts for the current bloodless technocrat cast to the Liberal front bench, since so many of its predominant figures are drawn from the civil service. John Diefenbaker says Pierre Trudeau is "not a House of Commons man" in that he has no real feel or respect for the chamber. He is entirely correct, of course. How could Trudeau have any essential feel for the House when his first choice in the governmental process was in the non-elected category? (He served as a Privy Council aide before being induced to put his credentials before the voters.)

Mitchell Sharp, who is one of the worst House leaders in history, comes by his ineptitude honestly. He had been a civil servant for 15 years before rapidly reaching his Peter principle in politics. The aloof Bud Drury traveled the same route.

I was having some drinks the other day with Jack Pickersgill, who maintains the only reason the Tories haven't been able to achieve power more often is that they are stupid. I argued there might be more to it, such as the Liberal recipe of which Pickersgill is the outstanding example. He started as a third secretary in External Affairs back in 1937, was a sly aide to both Mackenzie King and St. Laurent, then came out front as a politician in 1953. As transport minister in the 1960s he invented the Canadian Transport Commission and then resigned from politics to become its first chairman. He now, thanks to various grants, writes entertaining books explaining why the Liberals were always right. In the world of Tinker to Evers to Chance, he's in the Hall of Fame.

SHARP

HOWE

AUSTIN
. . . the most

Edgar Benson, when he grew bored as defence minister, was fixed up as the next president of the CTC. Gerard Pelletier became ambassador to France, a suitable rank that Sharp, Drury and Jean Marchand will soon fall heir to. It is generally ignored that the Liberals even have their own corporate pastureland for the care and feeding of out-of-work cabinet ministers. It is called Brascan (formerly Brazilian Light and Power), the conglomerate that controls Labatt Breweries, Ogilvie Flour Mills and everything down to Laura Secord candy. Mitchell Sharp, a deputy minister under C. D. Howe, was recycled through a vice-presidency in Brascan before emerging as an authentic Liberal cabinet minister in 1963. The late Robert Winters, another Howe protege, ran Rio Algom until he returned to Ottawa to joust for the 1968 Liberal leadership. He finished second to Trudeau and 31 days later emerged as new president of Brazilian Light and Power. Yet another Howe career man, Jack Nicholson, was a managing director of the same company for five years before surfacing as a Liberal cabinet minister. When he left politics, Ottawa made him B.C. lieutenant-governor. The present Brascan president, Jake Moore, is a former partner of Walter Gordon at Clarkson, Gordon. Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie was vice-president of another Gordon company.

And so it goes. The only time the internal railway raises attention is when the Liberals become absolutely too arrogant about it. The briefest immersion course in history belongs to Pierre Juneau, who resigned as CRTC chairman in August so he could be parachuted into the Hochelaga by-election to justify his cabinet post. Defeated in October, by November he had been handed a $50,000-range, unspecified job in Trudeau's office. Juneau, a heretofore honorable man, must blush a lot these days.

Most insulting of all was the payoff to Jack Austin, who served only 15 months as the PM's principal secretary and was rewarded with a $29,300 rest in the Senate. Since the clever Austin is only 43 and the law will not require him to retire until 75, it means a record payoff of $937,600. A fellow Liberal senator, as outraged at the appointment as were most B.C. voters, makes the point that the Senate is legitimately regarded as a slumber home for loyal party workers and dutiful bagmen. "Austin's total volunteer effort for the party," says this senator, "consists of 60 days—the time he put in running unsuccessfully for a seat in Vancouver-Kingsway years ago. Every other job he has had in government has been in the $40,000 to $50,000 bracket."

When Trudeaumania died after 1968, there were 38 government MPs defeated or retired in the 1972 election. The Liberals managed to fix up 26 of them with jobs. Calgary's Pat Mahoney became a federal court judge at $38,000. Martin O'Connell was fixed up in the PM's office. The charming John Roberts was taken on the PM's staff. Yves Forest became a judge of the Superior Court in Quebec. Russell Honey was appointed a county court judge. And on and on . . .

There would be an instant outcry in Britain if the civil service were as abused. The Trudeau Liberals seem intent on destroying the clear separation of politics and civil service necessary in the parliamentary system. Trudeau even uses his own office as a reservoir for candidates. The brainy Marc Lalonde moved into active politics from there. Gordon Gibson is now B.C. Liberal leader. Francis Fox is an MP, Romeo LeBlanc, the former Trudeau press secretary, is fisheries minister.

We do not have the multi-party system so much as one-party rule. Do you think Franco seriously viewed that as much different from his own regime? Do not sneer at dictatorships when this country is ruled by a shrewd, cynical oligarchy that has arranged the control and passing on of power.

Ottawa Shabby with Magazines

By GEOFFREY STEVENS
The Globe and Mail

OTTAWA — Anyone who cares about fair play, straightforwardness in government and freedom of discussion cannot help but be appalled by the shabbiness of the government's methods on Bill C-58.

Where to start? Back in January 23 of this year, perhaps. That was when Secretary of State Hugh Faulkner announced his intention to proceed with legislation (eventually introduced in April) to repeal the so-called "grandfather clause" under which Time and the Digest have enjoyed Canadian tax status. Normally, when a minister proposes a measure that will adversely affect someone, he bends over backward to give him a hearing, a chance to make representations. Not Mr. Faulkner. It was not until November 12 — 10 months later and after it was too late to serve any purpose—that he finally deigned to meet officials of Time Canada. It was a heated meeting which, according to one source, nearly led to fisticuffs. A grand way to conduct the nation's business.

Let's move from January to May 5 and 6, 1975. Those were the days on which Time Canada met the then Revenue Minister, Ron Basford, and his officials. No reasonable person could fail to conclude that Time was seriously misled as to the government's true intent.

Time had prepared a mock-up of a new newsmagazine with significantly increased Canadian coverage. Two revenue officials examined the mockup and measured its contents. They concluded that it was 42 per cent different from the U.S. edition of Time. It came so close to qualifying for Canadian tax status that Time was asked to submit a revised application for an advance ruling. How close it came was clearly revealed in a memorandum given to the participants in the May 6 meeting. Written by J. S. Hodgson, the deputy minister (taxation) to Mr. Basford, the memorandum stated, in part: "The requirement is that at least half the contents be new, fresh, original material which has not appeared in any periodical outside Canada."

The next day, Time submitted its revised application. There the matter rested for more than five months, until October 23 when the new Revenue Minister, Bud Cullen, issued a press release announcing that, to be Canadian, a magazine would have to be more than 80 per cent different from foreign magazines — not 50 per cent different, as in May. Even if Time could meet the 80 per cent requirement, Mr. Cullen had left it just 10 weeks until January 1 (when it is to lose its Canadian tax status) to lay plans, hire writers and editors, open bureaus and make arrangements with printers. Ten weeks' notice after five months' delay. Fair treatment?

To move closer to the present, the shabbiest aspect of the whole affair has been the way the government, by laying on the whips, has turned the hearings of the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts into a railroad. Crucial questions have been left unanswered. Important witnesses — including the president of Reader's Digest — have been denied a full hearing. The government barred from committee membership four Liberal MPs whom it feared might not be vulnerable to party discipline. One of them, Ralph Stewart (L, Cochrane), was thrown off the committee after having been a member for seven years and its chairman in the last Parliament. There was a poignant moment last week when Simma Holt, the tart-tongued Liberal from Vancouver, finally obtained permission, over the other Liberals' objections, to question Mr. Faulkner for five minutes. We then witnessed the spectacle of Mr. Faulkner pleading a prior commitment and dashing from the room rather than face questioning from his own backbencher.

It's bad enough to have the Liberal members behaving like puppets on Mr. Faulkner's string. Intelligent examination of the bill is made impossible by the weak and erratic chairmanship of Jacques Guilbault (L, St. Jacques). At times, he seems terrified of the fate that might befall him should he show the slightest courtesy to the opposition. He capped his performance with a series of preposterous procedural rulings which had the effect of denying the opposition its right to move substantive amendments.

Shabby.

HALIFAX — The thing to do about Bermuda is just grab her. Skip the exploratory talks, the plebiscites, all that falderal and palaver over constitutions. Newfoundland came in. Do we really want a Bermudian Joe Smallwood in our public life till the 21st century?

Of course not. Moreover, it's time Canada got into the invasion biz anyway. How can we expect Washington to respect us when we haven't got so much as one foreign assassination, or economic disruption campaign, or even the puniest coup to our name?

Bermuda's just the right size. We should walk right in there among the pink beaches, the mangroves, the lime trees, bikes and golf courses, and just take her. We should slap her across her snooty, colonial puss with a big cod fish till she says "Uncle Canuck with sugar on it" and sings "Oh Canada" in two languages.

It'll be a snap. It'll be over before you can say, "Hey, let's go schnorkeling in Canada's fifth Atlantic province." It'll be over even before the CBC has had a chance to announce that tough, new, Canadian police drama, "Bermuda Five-O."

It'll be over before the press has discovered even the name of the Premier of Bermuda, much less whether he might abandon the provincial field to run for the national leadership of the Tory party in his new mother country.

We Canadians have friends down there, you know. I've been boning up on air travel pamphlets to prepare myself for the coup, and therefore I know that all the Bermudians are already nuts about me. They probably think highly of you, too.

They'll strew the path of our soldiers with pink-and-white petals. We may not even need the codfish; but we must move at once. We must sail on the morning tide, our daggers between our lips, for the signal has winked in the night.

It came from one A. A. Francis during a speech to his fellow Bermudians at the annual banquet of something called the Mutualeers Club. Great Britain's shrinking interest in this tiny, island hangover of colonial times worried Mr. Francis and, in the course of his worrying he said:

"It may be found feasible and desirable for us to work out some constitutional arrangement with, say, Canada . . . We could conceivably elect to do as another island, Newfoundland, did . . . that is, to seek membership in the Canadian federation as a province . . ."

Now, this wasn't exactly a clarion call for Canadian absorption of Bermuda but it was nevertheless sufficiently exciting to inspire the Halifax Chronicle-Herald to argue on its front page that "Bermuda has much to offer Canada."

The idea deserved "the most careful and objective examination." Ottawa must give it "much more than passing attention." Especially one suspects, now that Moncton's just had a foot of snow.

It's odd that the Canadian passion for a constitutional relationship with a tropical island rarely grips the country after the birds have returned in the spring or before they've left in the fall.

Have you noticed the annual July 1 shortage of Canadian lobbyists for a takeover of the Turks and Caicos islands? The tremendous mutual interests of West Indians and Canadians becomes truly clear only in mid-February, which is when I normally ask magazine editors to assign me to survey Trinidadian opinion on such vital matters as Bobby Orr's knee.

All of which is why we must strike now, while the iron is hot and everything else is getting cold. Suppose we were so foolish as to opt for civilized negotiations. Suppose a Bermuda delegation were to arrive in Ottawa to discuss the terms of union during a January blizzard.

Oh, well, they reflect, weather isn't everything. The important thing is that Canada is a country whose rival groups have mastered the arts of communication and nurtured the wellsprings of tolerance so people can live harmoniously ever after, even in a vast and formidable land.

But then, the Bermudians pick up a newspaper. What's this? Labor leaders call cabinet ministers vicious hatchetmen. Cabinet ministers call labor leaders enemies of the people. Professors predict riots. French Canadians say Quebec may leave. English Canadians say good riddance.

Business attacks greedy labor. Labor attacks greedy business. Greedy government threatens everyone. Greedy everyone threatens the government.

The whole country smells of violent confrontation and here and there something pops, someone lashes out in an obscene gratification of an insane urge, but the game just goes on.

A face-off. The puck drops. Millions have at one another. The rules. What's happened to the rules? Anyway, it's colder than a polar bear's nose up here.

The Bermudian chaps prefer golf. The moment the blizzard lets up, they head for home. And that's why we've got to invade their islands now. If we wait till the natives discover what Canada's really like these days, Bermuda may leap straight into the ample bed of the U.S.A.

dial a long distance Christmas card this year

Greeting cards to distant friends and loved ones are among the warmest, most treasured traditions of Christmas.

The long distance "Christmas card" is the happiest greeting of all, because you deliver it with your own voice. And if you choose your time, it can cost little more than sending a good card.

It takes only a minute to say "Merry Christmas", but it's a minute that will live in both your memories for many months to come.

Just one word of advice, however. As you probably know, circuits all across Canada are overloaded on Christmas Day itself. To avoid disappointment we suggest you call before Christmas Day — or else during the long Christmas weekend.

Four Tips for Phoning your Long Distance "Christmas Cards" Smoothly and Economically

1. List in advance the phone numbers you plan to call. If you don't know the number, dial Long Distance Directory Assistance (no charge) as follows: for numbers outside B.C. dial 112 . . . then the Area Code of the area you want to call (it's shown in your telephone directory) . . . then 555-1212; for numbers inside B.C. dial O for Operator.
2. Dial your own long distance calls DDD station-to-station ("112"). With most DDD calls the minimum time charge is one minute — not three.
3. Remember, reduced DDD rates to most places in B.C. start at 5 p.m. — to places outside B.C. at 6 p.m. The same reduced DDD rates are also in effect all day Sunday.
4. If you phone east before 8 a.m. (when it's 11 a.m. in Toronto or Montreal), a DDD call costs at least 50% less than the regular day rate.

Coastal Zone Study Focuses on Island

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

Vancouver Island is high on the list of priorities in a forthcoming study of coastal resources, Prof. Irving Fox of the Westwater Research Centre at the University of B.C. said Tuesday.

The object of the research project starting in April is to improve management of such resources as estuaries and wetlands — the habitat of waterfowl and a source of nutriments to sea life, Fox said.

He observed that Britain has given serious attention to these resources. Construction of a super airport near London was turned down because of the effect it would have on the coastal environment. B.C. hasn't done much along these lines, he said.

Fox defined the coastal zone as "the band of dry land and adjacent open space (water and submerged land) in which land ecology and use directly affect ocean space ecology, and vice versa . . ."

"This is a region of great value," he added. "It is an area of great economic importance because of this rich biological productivity."

Fox said the centre would first make an inventory of coastal resources and then determine the conflicts of interests, such as seaport, recreation, fisheries and housing.

"After that we can make specific and detailed studies of vital areas," he said.

He said use of coastal zone resources poses important social and economic problems. These centre on the difficulty of allocating the use of the resources to minimize environmental damage.

"The difficulty stems in part from a lack of knowledge about what the physical and biological effects of alternative uses are likely to be," he said. "However, it is also the result of the inability of our institutions to weigh the social and economic effects of alternative uses and make the appropriate choice from among them."

Fox said it is most important the public's preferences be considered in determining the use of resources.

Westwater, he said, will soon approach federal and provincial governments for research funds.

Bill Otway, executive director of the B.C. Wildlife Federation, said his organization will co-operate with the Westwater project.

"On Vancouver Island, miles of marshlands are threatened by housing," he said. "It is obvious that nature never meant this type of land to be used for housing.

"As for the estuaries on the Island, they have been mismanaged. With proper planning, much of the damage could have been avoided."

Otway noted that the use of wetlands for housing has resulted in economic losses for individuals and for the province.

"Look what happened when the government several years ago allowed a subdivision on wetlands in Kamloops," he said. "The people were flooded out, and the people of British Columbia had to pay the bill."

YM-YW Dons Snowshoes

An outdoor recreation program which includes snowshoeing is being offered by the Victoria YM-YWCA.

Outdoor education director John Durkin said there are many areas near Victoria which are excellent for snowshoeing.

Starting Monday, Jan. 5, the course will include six hours of indoor discussion on Monday evenings, and a minimum of three weekend trips.

The Y is also giving a cross-country skiing course, starting at 7:30 p.m. on Jan. 8. It will include 10 hours of indoor discussion on Thursday evenings and a minimum of 20 hours of field instruction on weekends.

Passes for Prisoners Hassle for Police

The viewpoints of police on the day pass and day parole programs are examined in this second of three articles by reporter Hoi-Yin Der. In the first, the views of prison and parole officials were examined.

Wanted: William Turcott. Turcott escaped from a guard Oct. 24 while on a pass from William Head to play bridge at the Queen Victoria Inn. He was serving a four-year term for possession of MDA for the purpose of trafficking. His sentence was due to expire in July of 1976.

Wanted: Leonard Robert Larson. Larson escaped Oct. 21. He had been placed on day parole from William Head to a local lifeline house Sept. 10. His sentences include numerous offences such as robbery and a previous conviction for escape. Time left to serve as of January, 1974, was seven years, six months and 27 days.

Wanted: Clement Picard. Picard escaped April 15, two months after he had been placed on day parole from William Head to Pandora Community Correction Centre. Since his escape a warrant for his arrest has been issued by Calgary police for an extortion in July involving a Calgary bank manager and his wife. The Canadian Banker's Association has posted a $50,000 reward for Picard's arrest. He had been serving a 10-year sentence for robbery levied in October, 1971.

Wanted: F. Kandrnal. He escaped from William Head July 31 while on a pass to go swimming.

Captured: Dennis Lilley. Lilley escaped with Turcott on the bridge game pass Oct. 24. He was caught two days later and sentenced oct. 27 to one month consecutive to the expiry March, 1977, of a six-year term for possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

Following his plea of guilty in Victoria provincial court, Lilley told Judge Harold Alder he was very drunk at the time of escape, having consumed "a mickey of rye."

Greater Victoria police forces feel prison and parole officials must exercise more discrimination in the day release of inmates. They say inmates out on passes create an added burden for police, threaten public safety, waste taxpayers money and are covers for criminal activity.

Saanich police chief Bob Peterson says he recognizes the need for rehabilitative processes to gradually re-introduce inmates into society but feels more care should be taken in the screening of the prisoners to prevent escapes by day parolees or inmates on day passes.

"It's a privilege to get a day pass," Peterson said, adding that the whole process does create an extra burden for police.

Staff-Sgt. Ted Foster of Colwood RCMP said it is "especially a burden" to his small detachment.

"Because William Head is within our jurisdiction," said Foster, "we are responsible for all the paperwork when an inmate escapes while on a day pass in downtown Victoria, Esquimalt, Saanich or wherever."

Foster said the investigation, court appearances and issuing of cross-Canada warrants for arrest of the escapees tie up a lot of manhours.

"And with so many of them out each month, we really haven't the time nor the men to watch where each of them go.

"Another thing is that there are times notification that inmates are out on passes don't reach us until after the fact," Foster added.

Victoria police inspector Norman Bath said police have reason to believe some inmates use passes as covers for criminal activity.

"But it's really difficult to prove unless we catch them in the act," Bath said.

Foster, however, said criminal activities under the cover of passes have been proven in the past and "there are several cases under investigation and up before the court now."

He said he could not give details as it could hamper prosecution.

Staff-Sgt. Gordon Bennett of Victoria police noted that if an inmate could drink a mickey of rye while under guard on a bridge pass, inmates released on day passes, unescorted, "must do a helluva lot more."

"Yet, one of the conditions of all temporary passes is that they consume no alcohol nor use any narcotic or prohibited drug," Bennett said, "and violation of the condition is a criminal code offence."

Bath added: "We know perfectly well many inmates return to William Head under the influence of liquor and drugs but are never charged."

"Our hands are tied because passes are issued at the discretion of prison officials," Bennett said.

He cited examples of a William Head inmate who, while on a pass in 1973, robbed and stabbed a manager of a local department store on Douglas Street, and of another inmate on a pass to play floor hockey at the Bay St. Armoury Oct. 23 who, when convicted of a supermarket armed robbery in January, told the judge 'I knew I made a mistake . . . I should have killed him' (referring to the manager).

"Men like this, who are out of prison when they should be in, are jeopardizing the safety of the public," Bath said.

"Do we have to wait until someone is killed before we put a stop to this?"

The president of the Metchosin Ratepayers Association says Metchosin-area residents want the prison moved to another location.

"William Head is a medium security prison and technically the inmates are considered too dangerous to be eligible for minimum security institutions," John Waterman said.

"Are they then safe enough to go into the public?"

Waterman said Metchosin ratepayers have sent numerous briefs and letters to the solicitor-general, prime minister and local MLA but to date, there have been no positive replies.

(Next: Interview with five inmates serving lengthy sentences at William Head prison for murder, kidnapping and trafficking. The inmates will discuss their views on the day pass program.)

Anti-Inflation Plan Spells Paper Deluge

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal anti-inflation program will mean a deluge of paper work for thousands of companies required to make detailed calculations of the wages and benefits received by their employees.

A government source said Tuesday the onus will be on employers to determine the hourly value of both wages and all other benefits by filling out anti-inflation board forms.

The hourly value will be used in determining percentage pay increases allowed under the program. Pay increases are generally limited to 10 per cent in the first year for civil servants and employees of private companies with 500 or more employees, construction firms with more than 20 workers and firms deemed strategically important to the anti-inflation fight.

The requirement for filling out the forms will be included in 60 pages of regulations to be published Thursday night containing details of how the program of selective pay and price controls is to be administered.

The government plans to distribute 300,000 copies of an information kit explaining details of the nine-week-old program.

The pay increases allowed under the program include a basic percentage—eight per cent in the first year—as protection against inflation. The government source said the regulations would reduce the inflation—protection factor allowed in future years for workers benefiting from a cost-of-living clause in their contracts in excess of eight per cent in the first year.

The regulations also will include detailed definitions of the possible exemptions which could allow workers to receive larger pay increases. However, the anti-inflation board has the discretionary power of deciding when a group of workers is eligible for exemptions.

One method of exemption is to allow larger pay increases when they are required to maintain a historical relationship between two groups of workers.

An official said the regulations define historical relationships as existing under either of two circumstances.

—Where there is a demonstrable relationship between the level of pay and the timing and rate of increases for two different groups of workers for more than two years prior to Oct. 14; or,

—Where the two groups work for the same employer, are employed in the same industry and same local labor market and perform work related to the same product, process or service.

The anti-inflation board already has made clear in a number of rulings, however, that it will reject proposed wage increases meeting these criteria when it decides the increases required are too large or would do damage to the program itself.

The government's policy paper introducing the program also said the board may allow larger pay increases for workers whose previous contract had been signed prior to Jan. 1, 1974, because these workers had not had the chance to bargain since the inflation rate accelerated.

The regulations say that this provision would only apply if the previous contract had also expired prior to Oct. 14 and negotiation had begun on a new contract before that date, the official said.

Stolen Gold Recovered

OTTAWA (CP) — A search by six Canadian police forces and the FBI broke into an international crime operation and recovered almost three-quarters of the gold stolen from Ottawa International Airport last April, says a local police chief.

Gloucester Police Chief Ken Duncan said two men are being held in custody in Los Angeles where two gold bars worth $375,000 were recovered.

Chief Duncan said between $94,000 and $95,000 worth of the gold taken in the April 17, 1974 gold heist has been processed and sold to unsuspecting dealers.

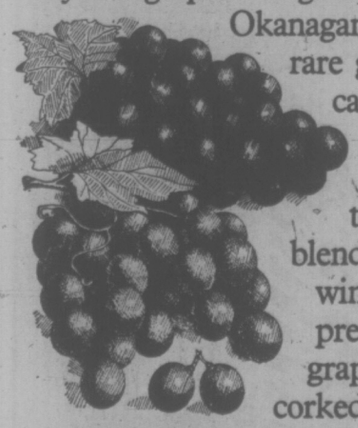
The chief criticized the airport for the lack of security information his force receives. He said a similar theft might happen again "by all means."

He said his force is not told of pending gold shipments such as the one April 17.

"It's a very poor situation," he said.

Sommet Rouge... it has to come of age before we blend it.

The distinctive European taste of Sommet Rouge comes largely from a French hybrid grape now grown in BC's sun-drenched Okanagan Valley. Wine from this rare grape is matured in oak casks in the winery's cellars until it "comes of age". Then, and only then, is it carefully blended with fully aged wine from imported premium California grapes, bottled and corked. The result is a robust, dry red wine that has put Sommet Rouge in heavy demand wherever it is sold.



Sommet Rouge. A Canadian wine with the European accent.

East Bloc Nations Cool to Arms Cuts

VIENNA (UPI) — Warsaw Pact nations have given a cool reception to a U.S. proposal to withdraw 1,000 tactical nuclear warheads from Europe if Russia pulls back 1,700 tanks and 68,000 soldiers.

Representatives of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Warsaw Pact nations will hold their last force-cut meeting Thursday before a six-week Christmas recess. An answer to the western proposal is expected then.

NATO diplomats did not hold out much hope that the proposal outlined by U.S. ambassador Stanley Resor at a 35-minute meeting Tuesday would break a two-year deadlock.

A Warsaw Pact spokesman who briefed reporters after Tuesday's meeting was careful to say he was not rejecting the proposal. But he did not appear to share the western view that the proposal could pave the way for a breakthrough.

"We have heard things along this line before," he said. "The proposal fits into the familiar scheme that dates back to 1973.

"I am not going to comment on the substance of the proposal," he said. "The talks are continuing. There will be another meeting on Thursday when a Warsaw Pact representative will speak."

The proposal was approved by the 12 NATO foreign ministers in Brussels last week. It was sponsored by U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger

It was the first western offer to reduce nuclear-weapon strength in Europe. Until the Tuesday meeting the east-west talks dealt only with troops and conventional weapons.

The U.S. offered to withdraw 1,000 of the 7,200 nuclear tactical warheads in western Europe plus 29,000 of the 300,000 troops stationed there.

The Russians, in return, would have to withdraw a full army of 1,700 tanks and 68,000 soliders from eastern Europe and reduce its ground forces to the western level.

Current estimates place Soviet bloc forces at 935,000 men and 15,500 tanks compared with NATO's 788,000 men and 6,880 tanks.

Fog Lifts But Airport In Turmoil

LONDON (AP) — The worst fog in 20 years cleared away from London today and the sun shone from a blue sky flecked with clouds.

The mood was not sunny at London airport, however, as employees sought to clear the backlog of delayed flights and to soothe scores of passengers who had spent two nights trying to sleep on floors and chairs. The passengers angrily complained that not enough had been done to ease their plight. "We have had to live like tramps. We have been given nothing to eat and nowhere to sleep," said Fred English, one of 100 passengers waiting since Monday for a flight to Australia.

Most of the delayed passengers had neither baths nor proper meals.

Today new arrivals picked their way over the luggage, sleeping bodies and dirty washing to join long queues at airline desks and telephones.

"It's just like a refugee camp," said one.

FIRE DEPT. MECHANIC RETIRING

Bob McKeen will step down as chief mechanic at the Victoria fire department toward the end of February to a retirement he has been looking forward to for years.

And it will be an early retirement, too.

McKeen said in an interview he has planned for years to retire at 55.

"I'm just going to enjoy life," he said.

The first thing McKeen and his wife, Anne, intend to do is spend several months trailering in Arizona, "taking life easy."

Then he plans to enjoy his boat and fishing in Victoria.

McKeen, who lives at 1352 Grant, has worked for the fire department for almost 30 years, the first 11 as a firefighter and the last 19 as head mechanic.

He said there has been "quite a change equipment-wise" over that time.

"We finally got into the modern age," he said.

While he said the old vehicles broke down more often, he didn't want to commit himself when asked if the new vehicles are better made.

"Now we don't have breakdowns," he said, because vehicles are routinely inspected every two or three months as a preventative maintenance program.

McKeen turned his hand to construction while head mechanic, building one truck from the ground up after the department bought the chassis, and remaking an old engine into a modern piece of equipment.

McKeen will be succeeded as head mechanic by Steve Bryant, a mechanic with the department.

Bennett Offered Honor

B.C.'s new premier, Bill Bennett, should be invited to unveil the city's statue of Captain James Cook when it's installed on a stone plinth on the Causeway some time between mid-January and early February, Mayor Peter Pollen suggested Tuesday.

The polybronze statue of the explorer, a copy of the Cook memorial in his home town of Whitby, Yorkshire, has arrived from England and is lying in a crate in the public works yard at Garbally Road.

The city is paying half the estimated $9,000 cost and the remainder is being financed by the Victoria Region Environmental Enhancement Foundation, a private foundation.

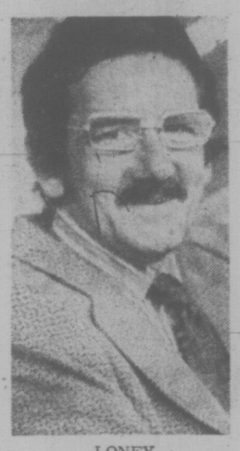
Eng Tries Again For Golf Course On Valley Land



LONEY
. . . new role

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Businessman Henry Eng, for the second time, has applied to Saanich to have 20.6 acres of controversial farmland in the Blenkinsop Valley turned into a golf course.

Eng plans to build a golf-driving range, nine-hole golf course, a pro shop and coffee bar. There will be parking for 60 cars.

Former Saanich municipal planner Tom Loney is acting for Eng.

At Tuesday's meeting of the council's lands, planning and housing department, Loney's request to have Eng's rezoning fees reduced was granted.

While in office, Loney had recommended rezoning fees be charged to cover costs of processing by municipal staff at a rate of $4 per 1,000 square feet of land. Eng's fee, at this rate, would be $3,604.

Loney's successor, Gil Laurenson, told the committee the fee structure, set by Loney, was intended to cover processing costs and "discourage frivolous applications."

Because Eng's proposal would see the land being used as "both a commercial venture and as open space," Laurenson recommended the fee be reduced to $300, plus an additional $150 if a public hearing is called.

The committee will recommend to council that this be done.

Loney was municipal planner when, in 1967, Eng applied to build a 22-acre miniature golf course and driving range on his property at 4090 Blenkinsop Road.

At that time council decided no development should be allowed that might mar the rural charm of the only extensive farming area in Greater Victoria.

Loney was ordered to prepare a study on the Blenkinsop Valley. This was completed in 1969.

Residents who attended the public hearing on the 1967 application expressed concern over the traffic the project would generate on a road that already had a bad record of traffic fatalities.

Council was told Eng proposed to strip off the top soil, cover the exposed area with hog fuel and apply a top layer of soil.

Residents complained that raising the level of the land would intensify the fall, winter and spring flooding on their properties.

Eng's second application was filed only days after work, ordered during an in-camera meeting of the environment committee on Aug. 18, was completed. At a cost of between $35,000 and $40,000, rock has been blasted and the channel from Blenkinsop Lake deepened to allow swifter runoffs. Eng and other property-owners attended that meeting.

The same meeting also recommended that a weir be built to ensure control of the water flow and prevent the drying-out of farmland during the warm weather.

This has yet to be done.

Municipal engineer Cliff Warren says this should be built next February or March.

'I sell to some very prominent people, you know,' says Al Young

Square Dancer Faced the Music For Lottery-Loving Americans

In the tiny cluttered room he rents at the top of the stairs of an old house on Herbert Street in Duncan sits Albert Phillip Young.

He is home now. The ordeal is over. And he is glad.

And when you go there, he comes to the door to meet you resplendent in plaid pants, bright red and white shirt and a western-style necktie.

He wears a great smile and runs a hand through his prickly silver hair that looks rather like a grey brush.

"Hi," he says enthusiastically, glancing at my camera. "I put on my square dance shirt for the picture."

"Come in, sit down," he says, and quickly adds that his friends call him Al.

And so you clear a space on the bed and squeeze in there between a pile of papers and a cat with no name who lies sleeping in an empty old Presto-Log carton. And you listen while Al tells what it was like to be arrested and spend 25 days in a jail cell in Port Angeles for selling Canadian lottery tickets in the United States.

Al, tall and fit and looking much younger than his 61 years, leads an energetic life. He swims a lot, goes hiking and camping, doesn't smoke or drink, and is a real square dance buff.

Once a member of the now-defunct Victoria Swinging Singles Club, Al still sports his "Swinging Singles" belt and proudly says he's attended the B.C. square dance jamboree at Penticton for the last seven years and the Washington State square dance festival for the last six years.

In Canada, Al is a registered lottery ticket seller. He subsidizes his Royal Canadian Air Force pension by buying potatoes from a farmer near here and selling them, and by selling Western Canada Lottery and Olympic Lottery tickets.

Because of his square-dance activities, Al has many contacts in the States and, he says, they take a lot of interest in Canadian lotteries.

"The Americans hear all about it on TV and radio and are eager to buy the tickets," Al says.

Washington State law, however, forbids gambling and, as well, U.S. Customs regulations prohibit importation of lottery tickets.

To Al, this seems hardly fair and he says they are "picking on" a senior Second World War RCAF veteran living on a small pension.

He points out that profits from the Western Canada Lottery go to promotion of sports, culture and recreation and shouldn't be considered professional gambling. And he hits at the "Lucky Number Sweepstakes" operating each week in Seattle papers.

"Are the Seattle newspapers too powerful to take action against?" he asks. "Is it much easier to pick on a senior war veteran from Canada?"

On his last ill-fated trip, Al had been in the States for three days and had sold almost 100 of the $3 Western Canada tickets (which carry two first prizes of $250,000) and "a few" of the $10 Olympic Lottery tickets (which offer three first prizes of $1 million each).

Not long before he was due to come back to Vancouver Island, Al was trying to sell

max low

a ticket to a garage owner in Sequim about 30 miles east of Port Angeles.

A plainclothes policeman overheard the transaction and at first just warned Al and told him to get out of town. But he had to wait for a bus to get back to Port Angeles and while he was walking around waiting, the policeman pulled up again and said he'd received a complaint and would have to take him in.

Bail was set at $1,000 but Al stayed in jail 25 days before arranging with a friend in Victoria to post it.

"I didn't think there was anything awfully bad about the jail," he says. "But I don't smoke and the worst thing was being in a small cell with five others who did."

After the 25 days, Al was released on bail and returned here. A few days later he had to go back to appear in court. He received a 25-day sentence (which he had already served, of course) and a deferred fine of $500, substantially less than the maximum $100,000 or five years in jail the offence carries.

"I kind of felt they wouldn't be too hard on me," he says. "They all seemed sorry this had happened."

Born in Nova Scotia, he joined the RACF and served between 1939 and 1945 in Alaska and down the west coast as a motor-boat crewman.

He was a construction worker in Victoria for some time and later took up freelance photography.

Al's freelance work was photography with a difference.

He joined the Sol Sante (Sun Health) Club for nudists at Shawnigan Lake, became treasurer and a member of the board of directors. There he took his photographs and sent them to magazines all over the U.S. and Canada — mainly to a now-extinct publication in Toronto called Sunbathing for Health.

And Al pauses and whips out an old card showing the name of his Nudist Foto Service with the words "Nudist Advancement by Photography."

Trouble was, though, the nudists at Shawnigan Lake weren't too excited about being "advanced." They felt they were suffering from a bit of overexposure and, after a few squabbles, forced Al to leave — and take his camera with him. That was 15 years ago.

What of the Americans who have bought lottery tickets from him?

"Well at first the officials told me that they were as guilty as I am," he says. "But, as there were so many, they later told me the people could keep their tickets and claim their prizes if they won. I've kept all the names and telephone numbers and I ring people if they win."

Oh yes, Al knew what he was doing was illegal.

"I sell to some very prominent people you know," he says. "And I thought it was just like the Irish Sweepstakes in Canada — it's not legal to sell Irish tickets openly and yet they publish the results."

And would he do it again?

"Oh no," he says quickly. "I wouldn't go over with tickets again."

But then there's a sudden twinkle in his eye.

Nurse School Cash Needed Quickly—RNs

The Registered Nurses Association of B.C. is urging the provincial government to commit funds for a school of nursing at the University of Victoria — and the university is assuming it will.

But for eight years now the school for advanced training of registered nurses has suffered from a congenital ailment — no money.

In a statement to government and university, the RNABC says a province-wide shortage of nurses with higher education cannot be met by the only existing school at the University of British Columbia.

"No matter how much money is spent on buildings and equipment, or how many technological advances are introduced, the standard of health care in British Columbia will not improve unless the individual delivering that care possesses the necessary knowledge and skills," says the RNABC brief.

Nurses provide 65 per cent of the health care work force but are not being prepared in sufficient numbers to provide more than basic nursing care.

The association says that 20 per cent of the province's 17,500 registered nurses live on Vancouver Island and the planned nursing school at UVic "will provide them with the opportunity to obtain advanced preparation — if the school receives the necessary support of the university and the provincial government."

Joseph Cunliffe, chairman of UVic's board of governors, said Tuesday that while the university does not have any assurance of a budget for the school from the province, it is assuming it will get funds and is planning on that basis.

The nursing school was first launched in the fall of 1968 but folded before the academic year was out because money from the province was not forthcoming.

It was scheduled to open again last fall but the opening has been delayed another year for lack of funds. A director has already been hired and there have been over 500 inquiries.

Jaw Surgery For Victim Of Beating

A 32-year-old man, victim of a savage beating and presumed robbery in downtown Victoria Monday night, remains in fair condition in Victoria General Hospital.

Terry Quocksister of 1526 Pandora was attacked by two youths as he left the Elks Club on Cormorant at about 10:19 p.m.

Victoria police S. Sgt. Gordon Bennett said his officers have still not been able to interview Quocksister who was operated on for a broken jaw on Tuesday.

ASK THE TIMES

Q. Who was Jack Miner?—B.I.

A. Miner was a Canadian bird conservationist who developed a bird sanctuary on his farm at Kingsville, Ontario. He died in 1944. Friends established in 1931 the Jack Miner Migratory Bird Foundation to help him continue his work on the migratory habits of birds.

Ask the Times wishes to explain a correct but misleading answer given last Saturday regarding the bittersweet and its relation to deadly nightshade. A form of nightshade is called bittersweet, but the better known bittersweet is a woody vine (celastrus) which grows wild in eastern Canada and the U.S., and is quite unrelated to the toxic nightshade (solanum). We are grateful to W. H. W. for suggesting the value of using scientific names rather than common names which are applied to many different kinds of plants.

Candidates Line Up To Replace Bawlf

Victoria MLA-elect Sam Bawlf said today he will resign from city council Dec. 31 and that a byelection will likely be held in late February.

Three candidates, including, defeated mayoralty candidate Henry Bitterman, have announced they will seek the post vacated by Bawlf.

Bawlf said the date for his resignation was chosen after discussion Tuesday with Mayor-elect Mike Young.

Bawlf was mid-way through his second term on council when he won a seat in the legislature in the Dec. 11 Socred sweep.

He said his term on council was "a productive three years in which the future was stabilized for the residential neighborhoods of Vic West, James Bay and Fernwood.

"I feel sure the pattern will ensure that city neighborhoods continue to be liveable," Bawlf said, adding "preservation of the city's heritage buildings also are well-in-hand."

The 31-year-old developer, plans to "wind up" his business affairs to become a full-time MLA in the new year, he said.

He said the planning of the city is "light years" ahead of its status three years ago and "it remains now for the city finances to catch up with current pressure.

"Hopefully we'll accomplish an enlightened dialogue between the city and the province in terms of revenue sharing generally and property taxes for provincial buildings."

City clerk Morran Waller has estimated by byelection will cost about $5,000 including $2,300 for preparation of a new voters list.

He has stated he'll recommend that closing date for nominations be set by Feb. 15, likely Feb. 8, and under terms of the Municipal Act the byelection is held the third following Saturday.

Meanwhile, Bitterman, 55, a realtor, is the third person to announce his candidacy in the byelection. The other two are Bill McElroy, a substitute teacher who placed third in the mayoralty election Nov. 15, and appraiser John Hayes, highest runner-up in the aldermanic election.

This will be Bitterman's fourth attempt to get on council. He's run once for mayor and twice for alderman. In the Nov. 15 election he came second with 794 votes to Mayor-elect Young, who swept to victory with 7,682 votes.

Heritage Guardian Wins Award

Victoria architect Peter Cotton has been awarded the Hallmark Society's special award for his 20-year contribution to heritage preservation in Victoria.

Hallmark president Don Reksten said Cotton has been a tireless champion of heritage preservation and an outspoken critic of wasteful demolition.

"Looking back through old newspaper files it is almost impossible to find a heritage building facing demolition that didn't have Peter Cotton standing in front of it pleading for its preservation," Reksten said.

Cotton is the former president of the Greater Victoria Historical Buildings Foundation and now serves as chairman of the city's Heritage Advisory Committee.

Norwich Union's award winner

His architectural work includes restoration of Emily Carr House, the Law Chambers, the Counting House and Craigflower Manor.

Cotton's award and the other annual Hallmark awards are to be presented at a Christmas meeting of the Society later today.

The communications award will be presented to Cecil Clark for "keeping the past part of the present" through his photographs and his book, "Yesterday and Today."

Two companies and one individual will receive commercial awards for preservation of heritage buidings.

Labatt Breweries was given the award for the restoration of its Government Street operation which was built in 1896 to house the Victoria Brewing and Ice Co.

The restoration was undertaken because of "the sheer enjoyment of doing something unique and lasting," a company spokesman said.

The Norwich Union Life Insurance Society will also receive a commercial award for its heritage building at 1162 Fort Street.

Reksten said the restoration of the building which was constructed in 1906 for Thomas Paterson who later served as lieutenant-governor, is a "perfect example of how company expansion and community interests can go hand in hand."

William C. McKechnie won the individual commercial award for restoration of Chandler House, in James Bay, as a restaurant.

The house was built in 1884 by the Hudson's Bay Co. for Factor John Chandler.

105 OPERATORS READY FOR CALLS

B.C. Telephone is expecting 70,000 long distance call attempts by Victoria customers on Christmas Day and will have 105 long distance operators handling the calls.

District customer service manager Bert Parker said today he recommends that customers try to space their calls over a few days before and after Christmas Day to avoid delays caused by the heavy volume.

"We also suggest people planning long distance calls obtain the area code and the number in advance, thus reducing delays in peak calling periods," Parker said.

On a province-wide basis, B.C. Tel will have more than 2,000 operators at work on Christmas day to handle the estimated 173,500 operator-dialled long distance calls and the expected 655,000-direct dialled calls. The estimates are up 32 per cent over last year.

Tim Balances Penalty With Equalizing Tally

Tim Williams made amends in fine fashion Tuesday night, blasting a goal 18:06 of the third period to give Victoria Cougars a 4-4 tie with Tigers in a Western Canada Hockey League game at Medicine Hat.

It was the third straight tie on a five-game road trip, which continues tonight with a game in Lethbridge against the Broncos.

Williams, who has connected five times in the last seven games after scoring only twice in his first 22 games this campaign, had been tagged with an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty earlier in the period for a remark to an official.

While he was serving the penalty, which left the Cats two players short, Tigers took a 4-3 lead on a power-play effort.

Lori Gloeckner was also serving a minor penalty at the time.

The tying goal, which extended a Cougar unbeaten run to five games, also came on a power play opportunity while Cliff Lane was sitting in the penalty box.

Al Hill led Cougar marksmen with two goals while Jim Gustafson connected with the other single to extend his record scoring streak to 33 consecutive games, including three last season.

Cougars completed a trade Tuesday with Calgary Centennials and will have Rick Hendricks in the lineup tonight.

The 18-year-old defenceman, who has seven goals and 38 assists in 31 games with Merritt Centennials of the B.C. Junior League, was obtained in a swap for 16-year-old Larry Woods, now playing intermediate hockey in Terrace.

In other WCHL games Tuesday, New Westminster Bruins tripped Centennials 5-2 in Calgary and the tussle between Brandon Wheat Kings and the Bombers in Flin Flon had to be called with 3:42 left in the third period after a bench-clearing brawl that involved players, fans and, eventually, the RCMP.

Referee Morris Winnychenko said president Ed Chynoweth of Calgary may be expected to rule on the affair in Flin Flon today. Either the game will be replayed or will stand as a 4-2 victory for Flin Flon.

Bombers had a man advantage when the problem erupted away from the play. Brandon's Terry Hochstetter hit Rick Gosselin and, when the Bomber player bent in pain, teammate Kevin Marinos went after Hochstetter. Both were about to receive major penalties when Gosselin returned to the ice and chased Hochstetter.

It was then players from both teams hit the ice and were joined by three or four fans. Several RCMP officers finally were needed to restore order.

The melee lasted 20 minutes and ended what had been a hard-skating, well-played game highlighted by outstanding goal-tending by Brandon's Glen Hanlon and Dale Rideout of Bombers.

VIEW IS NOT GOOD for Winnipeg goalie Curt Larsson, who is down on ice and watching puck sail into net from stick of Paul Henderson (right) of Toronto Toros. Watching action in World Hockey Association game are Lars-Erik Sjoberg of Jets and Toronto's Richard Farda. Larsson was happier when game ended with Jets on top by 4-3 margin. (CP Wirephoto)

Just for the Record, A Lorna Pollock Show

Some notes and like that, and belated congratulations to Lorna Pollock who has been selected as the B.C. Women's Tenpin Bowling Association bowler of the year for 1974-75 . . . And the reason why: Well, Lorna's record included the Victoria Bowling Association high average of 177, in two leagues, several 600 series, the highest of which were 636 and 630 and single-game totals of 265, 244, 235 and 233 . . . Her tournament record: first place in the local CTC roll-offs, scratch; first in the B.C. doubles; fifth in the Victoria city; first in the provincial roll-offs to pick the entry for the World Cup championship; top winner in the April roll-off of the Western Bowlers' Association, plus mention in other tournaments . . .

And then the climax, and with it, disappointment. For Lorna came within 16 pins and 50 bonus points of representing Canada in the International finals held in Manila. In a 21-game, round-robin, match-play competition, with 50 points being awarded for each game won, Lorna totalled 3,848 pins scratch, won 12, tied one, for 625 bonus points. The winner was Cathy Townsend of Montreal. Lorna's high was 245, her low 152, her average 183 (Cathy's was 184), and that's the average she holds in league play here at present . . . Come to think of it, Lorna is the only ladies' bowler to reach the final three of the nomination list for Victoria's top athletes of the year awards. That was in 1969 and she's still going strong. Perhaps the selectors should take note.

Hal Laycoe is still in a holding pattern insofar as his hockey career is concerned. "My contract runs out in the spring," he was saying, and no he doesn't have any plans for the future. Not yet. Laycoe's last official appointment was as general manager of the Vancouver Canucks. Before that he was coach. Before that he was at Los Angeles. And isn't it odd that the two men who were one-two in the Canuck organization in that club's formative days, are now out of the NHL altogether. Bud Poile is with the World Hockey Association as the executive director and Laycoe is sitting out the final months of that contract he had with the Canucks. But he still enjoys his hockey and he figures he saw 93 games last season dividing his time between the Canucks and the New Westminster Bruins.

He also thinks the "violence in hockey" bit is being overplayed a little and that people are over-reacting as well. "There are other sports which have just as much, if not more, violence, than hockey," he was saying. "I think hockey has come a long ways. Generally the game is disciplined very, very well. Certainly some type of moderate censure is needed, but most incidents are handled with dispatch and very well."

Laycoe also noted that the news stories don't always tell all the story and the full report is what the league decisions are based on. In the the case of Phil Roberto in Vancouver, the ruling from the top came quickly and fairly.

He also suggested that the average fan doesn't realize that when a player is suspended, his pay stops; and for example, in the case of Roberto, who was suspended for four games, that could be tantamount to a $4,000 fine, depending, of course, on what Roberto makes in a season. "And a lot of these incidents are involuntary," he commented. "And most players are sorry the moment it has happened." So that's another view.

As to the future: "I guess I'll have to start making plans, pretty soon," he said.

Otherwise, Pat Lundy, the former hockey player, is now big in standard-bred racing and will have a stable of pacers and trotters at the new Cloverdale Raceway, which opens with the New Year . . . Pat Fitzsimons of Salem, Ore., and JoAnn Washam of Auburn, Wash., have been named the most improved golfers of 1975 by Golf Digest Magazine, which is a nice plug for the Northwest. Each is 25 years of age . . . Coach Woody Hayes of Ohio State, asked if Archie Griffin, two-time winner of the Heisman Trophy, as the outstanding player in college football, could make it as a pro, despite his size of 5'9" and a modest 184 pounds, replied: "Maybe he's not as big as they like them, but he's as brave as they'd like to have them."

NEELD DEMOTED TO TORO FARM

TORONTO (CP) — Greg Neeld, the defenceman who lost an eye while playing junior hockey two years ago, has been stymied, at least temporarily, in his bid to make a career in the major leagues.

Neeld, who signed a three-year contract with Toronto Toros of the World Hockey Association last week, has been dispatched to Buffalo Norsemen of the North American Hockey League.

Gilles Leger, Toros general manager, said Neeld was sent to the farm to work himself into better condition. He is expected to play at least eight games with Buffalo.

He played with Calgary Centennials of the Western Canada Junior League in 1974-75 and went to Reno, Nev., of the Southwest Hockey League this season after the National Hockey League refused to change a rule that bars players with less than 25 per cent vision in one eye. That rule prevented him from playing with Buffalo Sabres, the team that owns his NHL rights.

Tardif Demonstrates Value In Clobbering of Cowboys

By The Canadian Press

Left winger Marc Tardif proved his worth to Quebec Nordiques and Winnipeg Jets continued to make life miserable for Toronto Toros.

Tardif, who recently signed a 10-year contract with the Nordiques for about $1.6 million, collected two goals and three assists Tuesday night to lead Quebec to a 7-3 World Hockey Association win over Calgary Cowboys.

The Jets improved their record over the Toros to 4-0 this season with a 4-3 triumph, thanks to Anders Hedberg's goal with 15 seconds remaining in their game in Toronto.

In other WHA games, San Diego Mariners surprised Houston Aeros 4-3, Edmonton Oilers defeated Indianapolis Racers 3-1 and Denver Spurs shaded Cincinnati Stingers 3-2 in overtime.

Tardif, who jumped to the WHA from Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League following the 1972-73 season, now has 29 goals—best in the league—and 28 assists for a league-leading 57 points.

The 26-year-old native of Granby, Que., had 38 goals and 34 assists with the Nordiques last season in 53 games after joining the club in a trade December, 1974, with the now-defunct Michigan Stags. He had 12 goals and five assists in 1974-75 with Michigan after 23 games.

Christian Bordeleau with two, Renald Leclerc, Serge Bernier and Real Cloutier scored the other goals for the Nordiques. J. C. Tremblay picked up four assists.

The Nordiques, however, remained in second place in the Canadian Division with 41 points, five behind the Jets who increased their record to 23 wins and nine defeats.

The Jets thrive on their opponents in the Canadian Division, holding a 6-0 record on the road and a 10-2 mark over-all. The Nordiques are the only team in that division having any success over the Jets, winning once at home and once in Winnipeg.

Hedberg took a blueline pass from line mate Bobby Hull, moved in alone on rookie netminder Dave Tataryn and flipped the puck over the goalie's right shoulder for Winnipeg's win over Toronto.

Peter Sullivan, with two goals, and Bill Lesuk, scored the other Winnipeg goals. Rookie Mark Napier, with two, and veteran Paul Henderson replied for Toronto, last in the Canadian Division with nine wins, three ties and 18 defeats.

Tataryn was again outstanding, stopping 39 shots, including one from Hull on a breakaway in the third period. Curt Larsson, in goal for Winnipeg, made 40 saves.

Tataryn, who called Hull the greatest, admitted he asked him for one of his sticks as a souvenir before the game.

John Goes to New York With His 40,688 Pledges

MEMPHIS (AP) — "I wouldn't have gone to New York without it. There wouldn't have been any use."

John Bassett Jr., president of Memphis Grizzlies, said that Tuesday night after a three-hour, locally-produced television marathon, the NFL-A-THON, surpassed a goal of 40,000 season tickets pledges for 1976 with 40,688 to demonstrate the city's interest in a National Football League franchise.

Bassett was meeting today with NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle and the NFL's four-man expansion committee to discuss the Grizzlies' application.

"Reaching 40,000 was necessary," Bassett said. "It's not smart business to finance a team to play in front of 20,000. But I feel good about everything. I feel really excited about talking with the NFL people."

Bassett has something to feel good about in Memphis. He brought the business, entertainment and political community together in the ticket pledge drive for the former World Football League team.

"It's a great victory for everyone concerned," he said.

The Grizzlies came into the NFL-A-THON with a total of 31,745 pledges, needing 8,255 to reach the goal.

French Girl Tops Slalom Ski Race

CORTINA d'AMPEZZO, Italy (AP) — Fabienne Serrat took the special slalom ski race of the women's World Cup today to give France the first victory in the competition this season.

The French skier was clocked in a total time of one minute, 51.23 seconds after two heats.

Pamela Behr of West Germany finished second in 1:51.54 and her team-mate, Hosi Mittermaier, third in 1:52.65.

Miss Mittermaier picked up 15 cup points from the slalom and 25 from the combined standings to lead the World Cup with 84 points.

The slalom race was hampered by clouds of fog covering the course.

VITRA Delays Rules Meeting

A special meeting of the Vancouver Island Track Racing Association, which had been called tonight to discuss new rules for the super-stock class of racing car at Western Speedway, has been postponed.

Art Reedy, the president of VITRA, announced the meeting will probably be held in conjunction with the regular general meeting Jan. 8.

KRAUTZUN SIGNS TWO-YEAR PACT

VANCOUVER (UPI) — The Vancouver Whitecaps of the North American Soccer League Tuesday announced the signing of Eckhard Krautzun of West Germany as manager and director of coaching development for the next two years.

"We feel we now have the best coach in the league," said Whitecaps general-manager Denny Veitch. "Eckhard is a tremendous acquisition.

"We look to him to give us a winning and entertaining team in Vancouver and are confident we will win our Pacific Coast division in 1976."

Krautzun is a former coach of the Canadian, Korean and Kenyan national soccer teams. He also coached a Japanese team which took third place at the Munich Olympics in 1972.

Veitch said Krautzun, 34, will be recruiting and signing overseas players pending his arrival in Vancouver on Jan. 15.

"He has established contacts with players from Germany, Britain and other European countries, Malta and the Orient," Veitch said.

"Our top priority in 1976 will be on offense, on finding a couple of high-scoring forwards. We hope to have six to eight imports, some of whom will be on loan from other clubs and two or three will be landed immigrants in Canada."

Last season the club's lineup was almost entirely Canadian and failed to make the playoffs.

FIRST TOUR DEFEAT

TOKYO (AP) — A Canadian women's basketball team suffered its first defeat in China to the August 1 women's team of the Chinest People's Liberation Army, 80-70, in Peking Tuesday evening, the Hsinhua news agency said. The Canadian girls had four wins and one draw out of their five previous matches with Chinese teams.

Coaches' Quotes Take New Twist

By The Associated Press

In the locker roo mat Chicago, you couldn't tell the winners from the losers without a scorecard.

"To be perfectly honest, we were really lousy tonight," said Rick Barry, whose Golden State Warriors beat Chicago Bulls 91-87 in a National Basketball Association game Tuesday night.

"Over-all, I thought our team did very well," said Chicago coach Dick Motta.

Elsewhere in the NBA, it was Washington Bullets 100, Buffalo Braves 94; New York Knicks 97, Atlanta Hawks 96; Philadelphia '76ers 105, Portland Trail Blazers 98; Houston Rockets 111, Kansas City Kings 100; and Cleveland Cavaliers 123, Los Angeles Lakers 103.

In the American Basketball Association, the Spirits of St. Louis beat San Antonio Spurs 106-103 and New York Nets defeated Kentucky Colonels 98-96.

The teamwork of the Warriors spilled over into the locker room. So did the teamwork of the Bulls.

"I don't shoot as much if the game dictates it," said Barry, who sparked a fourth-quarter rally that beat the Bulls.

"We didn't do well because they weren't getting the ball to me down low," said Chicago's Bob Love. "Consequently, I had to take some bad shots."

"I don't think Love should complain," said Motta, "because his three of 12 mark speaks for itself."

All of which helps explain why the Warriors, at 18-6, have the best record in the NBA and the Bulls, at 5-19, have the league's worst mark.

Gleam May Return to Ancient Wembley

LONDON (Reuter) — Wembley Stadium, 52 years old and showing its age, remains the pinnacle of British sport, and its directors are determined to fight off any challengers.

For the players and fans, a trip to Wembley for the annual Football Association Cup final, or for an international soccer match featuring England, is the highlight of any season.

Nearby, the Wembley Empire Pool, built in 1934, is London's biggest indoor sports hall and the scene of championship boxing, leading horse shows, six-day bicycle races, and the all-England badminton championships.

Wembley's historical highlights were the 1948 Olympic Games and the 1966 World Cup soccer finals. And it retains its affection in the hearts of British and international sports fans.

But the sprawling complex in northwest London looks ancient compared to modern stadiums in other parts of the world. Its sports, spectator and press facilities are far from ideal, and many people think the time has come for Britain to have a new national sports centre.

James Harvie-Watt, managing director of Wembley Stadium Ltd., a public company listed on the stock exchange, is troubled by the problems of maintaining facilities and the status as the national soccer ground. But he says: "I do not think there is a lot wrong with Wembley that can't be put right".

Harvie-Watt gathered sports reporters at Wembley recently to show the results of a $30-million development scheme which started three years ago, and to point out the plans for the future.

Wembley now is no gleaming white sports palace. Its twin towers overlook a dirty grey stadium, with battered seats. Most of the 100,000 capacity crowds are confined to crowded standing room, inadequate refreshment and toilet facilities, and face frustrating access and parking problems.

Wembley Stadium stages only about 10 soccer matches a year, down to university and schoolboy level, but is also the site of the Rugby League Cup final, women's hockey, Irish traditional sports, speedway and military pageants and shows such as the Evel Knievel motorcycling spectacular.

The most profitable venture is greyhound racing which holds 120 meetings a year, with the stadium company getting a share of betting revenue.

"Without greyhound racing, the stadium could not exist," Harvie-Watt said.

The current development program has given Wembley a new 330-bedroom hotel, a multistorey car park for 1,400 cars, an international conference hall, overhead pedestrian walkways, an office building and a start on refurbishing buffets, bars and players dressing rooms.

Under new government legislation, Wembley like all other sports grounds, must improve crowd control and safety features. Harvie-Watt fears this could cost up to $1 million, and he wants to revise all spectator facilities at the same time.

Private Forestry Brief Yields Partial Solution

One of the better recommendations contained in various presentations to the Royal Commission on Forest Resources may be found, not in the missives submitted by giant forest companies or the various resource agencies, but in a private brief tabled by professional forester Stan Nichols of Duncan.

If it forms part of the yet-to-be written report of commissioner Peter Pearse, the suggestion would do much to ease many of the environmental problems now encountered at the field level.

That's assuming the new provincial administration isn't foolish enough to shelve the report just because it was instigated by the NDP regime.

Last week, I pointed out the vast discrepancy existing between the number of professional foresters employed by the U.S. and B.C. forest services. Compare the figures. B.C. has 327 professional foresters compared to 4,897 employed to administer the U.S. national forests. The total productive forest land is nearly the same: 102,900,000 acres in the U.S. and 117,086,210 in this province.

Stan has come up with some additional facts.

"In terms of forester per acre," he said about the B.C. forest service. "The ratio is 1:358,100."

In contrast, "this ratio is estimated at 1:50,000" for industrial foresters employed by the larger timber companies to administer tree farm licences and crown grants.

"Furthermore, most of the existing forest service foresters are located either in district offices or in Victoria and to a large degree isolated from day-to-day management.

"Thus, there is a definite lack of professional government supervisory personnel at the field level.

"I would recommend that a professional forester be located in each ranger district with the primary responsibility for supervising silvicultural practices in that area," says Nichols.

A quick check reveals there are now 101 ranger districts in British Columbia. Employing that number of additional foresters wouldn't quite balance things out in relation to the expertise being applied in the U.S., but it would help.

And, the extra tab of approximately $2.5 million (and that's a rough estimate on the high side) in salaries wouldn't mean all that much in a department that spent nearly $69 million in the last fiscal year.

Nichols goes on:

"In the case of contractors or small companies that do not have professional foresters on staff, this forester would be responsible for undertaking all silvicultural projects on harvested lands. In the case of larger industrial operations that have foresters on staff and wish to carry out silvicultural projects themselves, the forest service forester would assume a supervisory-liaison role."

It's an idea that merits careful consideration.

Since nobody in their right mind wants a broken leg, why do 85 per cent of skiers use bindings which are defective or improperly adjusted? . . . That's a figure the Canadian Ski Patrol came up with after evaluating their accident and control group studies conducted last year . . . It also revealed that bindings failed to release in nearly half of the accidents reported . . . Little wonder . . . Every ski season, I'm amazed at the number of unprotected skis being carried on racks outside vehicles . . . Salt, sand and mud don't help the functioning of a binding . . . Since ski covers are relatively cheap compared to every other part of the equipment, why aren't more in use ? . . . So keep those bindings clean, well-lubricated and set correctly by a qualified ski shop mechanic . . . It will enhance your chances of enjoying an entire season.

Ron Jobson led the Saanich attack with three goals and Brent Patterson supplied the club's other two tallies.

Terry Parsons and Gary Bechtold connected for Esquimalt, which outshot Saanich, 26-25.

Flames Hitting Good Shots

ATLANTA (CP) — Atlanta Flames extended their unbeaten streak to six games Tuesday night with a 3-1 triumph over Kansas City Scouts, and coach Fred Creighton compared his club's record to that of a golfer.

"You go back over the games and you see different people chipping in on different nights," said Creighton after his Flames defeated the Scouts in the only National Hockey League game to move to within five points of second-place New York Islanders in the Patrick Division.

It was Hilliard Graves, Claude St. Sauveur and Gerry Meehan doing the damage Tuesday night for the Flames, each scoring a goal.

Second-period goals by Graves and St. Sauveur snapped a 1-1 first-period tie and sent the Flames to their fifth victory in six games. The other ended in a 3-3 tie against the Islanders. It also brought Atlanta's record to 7-1-1 in the last nine games.

"It's like in golf," said Creighton of his club which started the season slowly but now has a 15-13-3 record. "You hit a good shot and then you're probably going to hit three or four more good ones. Then you can't wait to get to the next tee. The guys are starting to believe in themselves."

Kansas City got its only goal at 15:33 of the opening period when Wilf Paiment scored his 11th of the year, beating goalie Dan Bouchard, who stopped the Scouts' other 22 shots.

"Every game we've played against this team, they've outplayed us," said coach Bep Guidolin of the Scouts. "I don't know what it is."

Graves, with his eighth goal of the year, and St. Sauveur, with his 10th, broke the game open, scoring within 89 seconds of each other early in the second period.

"We were a little too loose in the first period, but we played pretty good offensively in the second period and we tightened up on defence," said Creighton.

One unhappy note for the Flames was an injury to forward Larry Romanchych, who collided with Kansas City defencemen Ken Murray in the final period.

Creighton said Romanchych suffered strained ligaments in his left knee and will be out 10 days to three weeks.

Meanwhile, Washington Capitals, continuing to shuffle players in hopes of finding a winning combination, sent top scorer Stan Gilbertson to Pittsburgh Penguins in exchange for centre Harvey Bennett.

It was the second trade in less than 24 hours for the Capitals. Monday, Washington picked up right winger Bob Sirois from Philadelphia Flyers in exchange for a player to be named later.

Gilbertson, 31, had 13 goals and 14 assists this season for the Capitals.

Amazing Forego Repeats As 'Horse of the Year'

NEW YORK (AP) — Forego, the huge gelding with the gimpy legs, was named U.S. thoroughbred racing's Horse of the Year for the second consecutive year on Tuesday. Other major Eclipse Awards winners were Ruffian, the ill-fated three-year-old filly, and Wajima, the late - blooming three-year-old colt.

Snow Knight, owned by E. P. Taylor of Toronto and Neil Phillips of Montreal, was named top thoroughbred grass runner.

Forego, owned by Martha Gerry and trained by Sherrill Ward, also was again named best older male in voting by the Thoroughbred Racing Association's board of selection, the National Turf Writers Association and the Daily Racing Form. And he just missed repeating as sprint champion, a title that went to Robert P. Horton's Gallant Bob.

The other 1975 division winners, who will be honored here Jan. 30 at the Eclipse Awards Dinner, were: two-year-old colt, Bert Firestone's Honest Pleasure; two-year-old filly, Richard E. Bailey's Dearly Precious; four-year-old filly or mare, Fred. W. Hooper's Susan's Girl; and steeplechase, Mrs. William J. Van Allen's Life's Illusion.

Forego raced his entire 1975 campaign with fluid in his right hind ankle. He recorded six victories, one second, one third and one fourth in nine starts and finished the year with a career bankroll of $1,163,520.

Ruffian, who had to be destroyed after breaking down in a match race against Foolish Pleasure July 6, was owned by Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Janney. East-West Stable raced Wajima, who has been retired to stud under syndication.

Snow Knight, an English-bred four-year-old, won six of nine races this year and earned $281,435. His stakes victories included the Canadian International Championship at Toronto Woodbine, Brighton Beach and Man o' War Handicap.

Phillips purchased Snow Knight for his wife for $14,000. After the horse won the Epsom Derby in 1974, he sold 60 per cent interest in Snow Knight to Taylor for $1 million.

Scottish Surprises

GLASGOW (AFP) — Scottish manager Willie Ormond sprang some surprises Tuesday when he announced the makeup of his team for today's Group Four European Nations soccer matchup with Romania.

Andy Gray, Scotland's leading goal scorer in under-23 international matches last year, was promoted along with Peter Doyle, Ayr United right winger; John Browlie of Hibernian and Hearts goaltender Jim Cruickshank.

Ormond said he felt free to experiment at this stage since neither Scotland nor Romania now can qualify for the championship.

CHRIS QUICKEST TO HIT THOUSAND

LAUREL, Md. (AP) — Chris McCarron became the first jockey to ride a total of 1000 winners in two consecutive years Tuesday as he scored a 1½-length victory aboard Sam Van Stable's Swinger John at Laurel race course.

The feat by the 20-year-old Boston native came exactly a year after he broke Sandy Hawley's single-year record of 515 winners. McCarron, then an apprentice, finished 1974 with 546 winners.

The closest any rider has come to McCarron's achievement was when Hawley, from Mississauga, Ont., rode 1000 winners over three years. It took Bill Shoemaker four years, Laffit Pincay five, Braulio Baeza six and Walter Blum eight years to reach the winner's circle 1000 times.

McCarron, who lost his apprentice status this year, leads all North American jockeys with 454 winners.

IN-HOUSE THIEVES BUSY

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The chief of Superdome security said Tuesday that employees of the stadium's food concessionaire may be responsible for widespread meat and equipment thefts.

John Pechon Jr. said that evidence gathered so far by state and local police who have been investigating security at the dome "point conclusively" to in-house thieving by employees of Ogden Foods.

Pechon, security specialist for Superdome Services Inc., was responding to charges by Frank Fry of Ogden that food, cash and restaurant furnishings valued at $160,000 have been stolen since the stadium opened in August.

The latest theft—$2,000 worth of prime steaks, seafood, and utensils pilfered from the plush Stadium Club —occurred over the weekend.

Pechon said he doubted the thefts were as severe as Fry claimed.

However, he said the firm "virtually invited" thefts by inadequate locks and what he said was its refusal to purchase a burglar alarm system.

Whalers Off the Hook, Smith Can't Find Job

LION'S HEAD, Ont. (CP) — Those big contracts handed out to professional hockey players aren't always as impressive as they sound. Ask Al Smith.

A 29-year-old goaltender who has played in both the National Hockey League and World Hockey Association, Smith went so far as to let New England Whalers of the WHA out of one of those deals.

As a result, he's out of work this winter — a free agent who would like to return to the game but who is stymied by the fact that Buffalo Sabres, who own his NHL rights, are not interested.

And so he spends his time at home in Lion's Head, a Bruce Peninsula village on Georgian Bay 40 miles north of Owen Sound.

Smith played with the Victoria Maple Leafs of the Western Hockey League in the 1966-67 season.

"I'd still like to be playing hockey somewhere," he says ruefully. "But I guess they've all lost my phone number."

A year ago Smith had completed two years of a five-year contract with New England. The agreement was renogotiated during the summer and called for about $125,000 a year.

Smith played 59 games for the Whalers last season and had a 3.47 goals-against average. But then came a money problem.

"What happened was they owed me a considerable amount of money. But when it came time to pay they wanted me to wait until the season started this year. I just didn't think that was the proper thing to do."

He says the Whalers owed him about 40 per cent of last season's salary but didn't have the cash on hand and told him he would have to accept deferred payments. He was finally paid in August.

"It was the fact that they wanted me to go into the next season with it still not complete . . . It was just a matter of principle for me . . . Now they try to tell me it's my fault because I signed a contract for too much money.

"Geez, I started out in hockey making $5,000 a year. I had to have loans every year.

'I had then wired into this contract but I just wanted to be clean. So I said, 'Listen, you want out of this contract. I'll let you out. Just pay me, though, for what I've played.'

"They phoned me back and said they wanted out.

"I gave up four years of the contract that would have brought me about half a million dollars."

As a free agent, Smith thought he might return to Pittsburgh Penguins of the NHL, where he previously played two years, but general manager Wren Blair told him he wasn't even supposed to speak to Smith without Buffalo's approval. And Buffalo hasn't called.

"I haven't pursued all this enough to consider that I've been blackballed by hockey," Smith said. "Toronto Toros, for instance, could probably use me but I'm not in the position of really wanting to push myself on anyone.

Smith, who lives in Lion's Head with his wife and two daughters, is coaching an intermediate hockey team and working on a book. He said he is also trying for a government loan to build an amphitheatre in this area.

"I'm busy. I've got lost of things to do. I'm happy."

But he would probably be a lot happier if the telephone would ring.

Save-Saints Project May Involve Players

TORONTO (CP) — Wayne Belisle, president of Minnesota Fighting Saints, hopes to involve his World Hockey Association players in a limited partnership agreement that will keep the team solvent.

"The players will become investors and part owners without the personal exposure," said Belisle in a telephone interview from Minnesota on Tuesday, adding the players will be asked Friday to help keep the financially troubled franchise afloat.

"The limited partnership setup was granted by United States taxation authorities. With the tax benefits that will be afforded players, each dollar put in will cost them only 35 cents.

The Globe and Mail said in its editions today that the Fighting Saints barely made Monday's payroll and chances are not good that they will be able to make the next one, scheduled for the end of the month, unless something is done.

The newspaper said two other WHA teams, Denver and San Diego, are likely to fold by the end of the season, with Cleveland, Calgary and Phoenix surviving only because of strong ownership.

Only Roof Will Be Missing

At Montreal Olympics

NEW YORK (UPI) — Roger Rousseau, president of the organizing committee for the 1976 Montreal Olympic Games, said Tuesday the only thing missing on opening day July 17 will be a roof on the main stadium.

"The games will start on time and the facilities will be ready. The only critical area is the stadium, where the roof may not be in place," Rousseau said at a news conference.

"Actually, the International Olympic Committee rules say the sports to be contested there — track and field, football, equestrian — must be outdoor competition anyhow. If we had a roof we would need special dispensation. The essential things will be in place."

Gilles Bergeron, director general of the committee for housing Olympic visitors, said 110,000 to 120,000 daily visitors were expected and 235,000 beds were available within an 85-mile radius.

Ticket sales are going well, the committee said, with 701,000 sold so far in the United States out of an allotment of 1,168,000 tickets for the various sessions of the 21 sports on the Olympic program.

"We believe the games will draw 120,000 Americans, each buying several tickets," Rousseau said. "Worldwide, we have sold half of our total ticket supply for $20 million."

Each of the 132 competing nations got an original allotment of tickets, and the tickets not sold by Dec. 31 will be returned to the organizing committee for re-allotment. The committee expects that more than 4 million tickets will be sold.

"If another labor strike should halt work on the main stadium, it would hurt us badly, but we would find a way to get it done," Rousseau said in answer to a question on construction.

U.S. Spies for Profit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Court documents show the United States uses wiretaps, electronic bugs and satellite surveillance against other governments, not to prevent espionage, but to gather intelligence to help form U.S. foreign policy, the Washington Post reported today.

The existence of eavesdropping without court warrants against foreign officials in Washington was revealed for the first time, the newspaper said, in justice department documents filed as part of a journalist's suit against the government for allegedly having listened in on his telephone conversations without a warrant.

The departmenet's brief, the Post said, argued: "In order to adequately protect itself in a hostile world, the United States cannot depend upon chance to find out what is happening."

Lawyers for journalist Tal Szulc and his wife, who claim their conversations were overheard, said warrants are required for all government wiretaps, including those designed to gather foreign intelligence.

Previous court decisions have held the government must get a warrant on national security wiretaps unless the target is an agent or acting in collaboration with a foreign government.

The government brief said it would "endanger legitimate government interests" to have to have a judge's approval in advance. It also argued that because intelligence gathering is "virtually in continuous operation" there might not be any specific individuals who are "specifically predetermined targets."

The brief argued that the attorney-general and the president — not federal judges — must decide whether to authorize foreign intelligence wiretaps by weighing the public interests against the effects of the surveillances on individual rights.

MAIL HIKE QUERIED

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The price of a first class letter in the U.S. may not be going up to 13 cents this month after all.

Federal judge John Sirica ruled Tuesday the postal rate increase planned Dec. 28 was imposed illegally.

Sirica said the postal service did not follow all the legal requirements in appying for the proposed increase and must do so before the rates can go up.

Postmaster General Benjamin Bailar said the ruling would be appealed because any delay would result in worsening of the postal service's $200 million a month deficit.

Bioplasmic Snow Maker Turned Out All Wet

AKRON, Ohio (UPI) — John William Zofchak set his "bioplasmic energy-gathering" pyramid to "snow" Monday and sat back to await a blizzard, planning to laugh all the way to the bank.

But mother nature threw a wet blanket on his hopes, yielding only a cold, drizzling rain.

Zofchak, 29, a pinball machine repairman, had promised to prove the worth and profitability of his "bioplasmic energy-gathering accumulator" by dropping 24 inches of snow on Akron Dec. 15. He claimed all the credit for unseasonably warm weather in northeast Ohio this autumn.

The accumulator, set up on a hilltop, consists of a six-foot-high pyramid modeled after the Great Pyramid of Gizeh. Zofchak operates the plastic-covered steel wool and aluminum foil pyramid by adjusting a pair of billiard cues mounted on revolving steel pipes. The cues are connected to the pyramid by wires.

"Well, it got too warm for snow," Zofchak said, explaining Monday's failure. "That's what happened.

"I've been in operation trying to keep weather patterns coming in from the south for a month and a half. When you get the energy going in a stream it tends to continue. I just wasn't able to stop it in one day."

Zofchak's faith in the accumulator, scoffed at by government officials, weathermen and patent attorneys, remained unshaken.

"If I can't get it to snow, I'll just keep it with no snow," he said. "A lot of what I have done has been through trial and error, so sometimes I can make a goof like this."

Pan Am Seeks Strike Flights

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board is having a difficult time deciding whether to let Pan American World Airways help ease the holiday travel crunch caused by the United Airlines strike.

Pan Am, normally forbidden to carry passengers between U.S. cities, asked last Thursday for emergency authority to carry holiday travelers on two domestic routes where the United walkout forced about 2,000 persons a day to seek seats on other airlines.

A CAB ruling on the request had been expected Monday.

One problem is issuing a ruling, sources said, is that the board must consider whether a ruling in Pan Am's favor might set a precedent on airline routes and on CAB involvement in labor isssues.

The holiday travel rush starts Thursday and extends through Dec. 28. Travelers already are finding it almost impossible to get flights between major cities because of the United strike, which started Dec. 6, and another that has grounded National Airlines since September.

Black Market Baby Sales Investigated

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Children's Bureau has begun a study of black market babies and other adoption abuses in five cities.

"The selling of babies is barbaric and the need to eliminate such activity is urgent," said adoption specialist Ursula Gallagher in a report explaining the study.

She cited press and Congressional reports that infants have been bought and sold for fees up to $25,000 in recent years. She recalled that Senate hearings in the 1950s and 1960s disclosed abuses including placement of children for high fees without concern for the biological mother, qualifications of the would-be parents or the safety and welfare of the child.

"It appears that history is repeating itself, probably in view of the imbalance between 'supply and demand' of babies," her report said.

Tel Boost Thursday

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Telephone Co. will announce individual rate increases for 1976 on Thursday after they are filed with the Canadian Transport Commission in Ottawa.

Company spokesman Colin Patterson said Tuesday that the new rates would not be in effect before Jan. 1, but "probably will be effective Jan. 1."

He said he could not be more specific until the rates had been filed formally with the commission.

The company originally applied to the commission last March for a 19.8-per cent over-all increase and was granted an immediate interim increase of 10 per cent in July.

The commission later granted the balance of the increase for 1976, however, on Nov. 3 it cut back part of the second stage, ruling that B.C. Tel must abide by the federal government's anti-inflation guidelines.

Patterson said that B.C. Tel did not appeal the commission's ruling, but held discussions with the commission and the Anti-Inflation Board to clarify some points in the ruling. The ruling means that individual tariffs had to be revised from those set out in the previously-approved application, he said.

B.C. Tel was seeking to increase revenue in 1976 by $48.9 million.

The 10 per cent raise granted in July, which took effect in August, will provide additional revenue of $25.2 million next year.

Prior to the anti-inflation program, the transport commission approved the additional 9.8 per cent increase but reduced the increase for residential subscribers to 5.4 per cent.

Following announcement of the anti-inflation program, B.C. Tel became the first government-regulated industry to be affected and the commission ordered the company to cut its second increase by $6.7 million to $17 million from $23.7 million.

Families Lose Out To Airport

OTTAWA (CP) — Five Richmond, B.C., families have lost their fight against federal government expropriation of their homes to make way for the expansion of Vancouver International Airport.

The Supreme Court of Canada Tuesday dismissed with costs an application by the Sea Island residents to hear an appeal against a decision by the Federal Court of Appeal in October that ruled in favor of expropriation.

The Supreme Court decision brings to an end a 13-month legal battle by Alfred and Dorothy Edinger, Gerald and Marquerite Miller, Horst and Barbara Kohne, Thomas Grayson and John Bolton to save their homes and property from expropriation.

Museum Lecture On Musk-Oxen

David Gray of the National Museum of Natural Sciences will be in Victoria Dec. 30 to give a noon-hour illustrated talk at the Provincial Museum.

Gray will describe the animals, scenery and ecology of the Canadian Arctic.

Ferry Plunger Identified as Victorian

An 89-year-old Victoria man has been identified as the person believed to have gone over the side of the B.C. Ferries' Queen of Esquimalt shorty after she left Tsawwassen at 2 p.m. Dec. 11.

Sidney RCMP have identified him as Robert Crawford of 611 Frances.

The spokesman said examination of the clothing, found on a locker after the report of a man overboard was given, identified him. A Canadian coast guard cutter and armed forces helicopter, as well as the ferry, failed to find him.

Searches for three more missing men have also been called off. All three cases have been put on police missing-persons lists.

In Oak Bay, James Keith Courtnall, 44, of 1079 Deal, disappeared Nov. 5, possibly during a swim near Oak Bay Marina.

Courtnall was a well-known figure on the waterfront, keeping himself in shape by jogging and one or more 20-minute swims each day, just south of the marina. He had at one time suffered from epilepsy.

Nicknamed Tarzan, Courtnall was last seen between 2 and 2:30 p.m. Nov. 5, heading for his second swim of the day. He normally never went more than 100 yards offshore during bad weather. There were high waves and strong tides both that day and the following.

When the weather was good, Courtnall often swam to Mary Tod Island. All islands in the area have been searched.

There has also been no sign of Mill Bay resident Lloyd Aune, 59, since his boat capsized Dec. 8 about 100 feet out from his waterfront home.

A body, spotted off Sidney Spit about 4:15 p.m. Thursday by the crew of a fishboat, was lost when a crew member tried to retrieve it. Police are unable to say whether it was Aune.

The best to you from Palm. Sour Cream.

Five Charged in Alberta's Biggest Pot Haul

RED DEER (CP) — Three persons charged in connection with what police say was the biggest marijuana seizure in Alberta were released on $25,000 bail each Tuesday in provincial court.

Along with two others released on their own recognizance, they will appear again in court Dec. 23.

RCMP Cpl. Glen Van Vorst said that along with 500 pounds of a substance police believe to be marijuana found in a pickup truck in Red Deer and another 500 pounds seized in a raid on a farmhouse Sunday near Blackfalds, north of the city, an unspecified amount of money was confiscated.

The marijuana would have a street value of around $400,000.

The seizure "probably effectively dried up one of the major sources in this area and the larger centres in Western Canada," said Insp. S. A. Rammage.

"The quantity itself indicates very widespread distribution."

William Dolsen, 29, the owner of the farmhouse, Mark Juhani Ikavalko, 26, of Coquitlam and Keren Persyko, 41, of Kaleden, B.C., were granted bail.

Dolsen's wife, Roberta, 26, and Brenda Trute, 22, of Coquitlam were released on their own recognizance Monday afternoon.

All five are charged with possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking. The Dolsens have pleaded not guilty. The others have not yet pleaded.

BOSS WAS THIEF

WINNIPEG (CP) — A man who used his position as field supervisor for several Robinson Little and Co. Ltd. stores in Western Canada to steal goods of an undertermined value, was sentenced Tuesday to eight months in jail.

Harold Alwyn Wright, 39, of Calgary pleaded guilty in provincial judges court in Winnipeg to four charges of theft. He was also placed on two years supervised probation.

Two of the charges originated in Alberta and one in British Columbia but were transferred to the Manitoba court. The offences occurred in 1972 and 1973.

Big Airlift For Forces Exercises

EDMONTON (CP) — Air Transport from Canadian Forces Base Edmonton will air lift more than 1,000 soldiers into the B.C. interior next month for a large-scale winter exercise.

The exercise, called Rapier Thrust IV, will be held Jan. 5 to 24 and involve combat troops from Calgary, Winnipeg, Shilo, Man., and Chilliwack.

The exercise, largest to be scheduled in 1976, will be held in the Chilcotin area of central B.C.

Troops and equipment based at Calgary will be trucked to Edmonton Jan. 3 and then flown by Hercules aircraft to Williams Lake where the troops will be moved to the exercise area near Tatla Lake.

REGINA (CP) — Gas and clerical workers at Saskatchewan Power Corp. will use work-to-rule tactics in their current contract dispute, but will maintain emergency services and not "do anything that would alarm the public," union spokesman Gord Steininger said today.

Steininger declined to release the pay increase being sought by the union, but a union international representative, Ron Duncan, said in early November that the union would seek an increase of $3.10 an hour.

EDMONTON (CP) — Timothy Lee Kennedy, 19, and Stephen Toth, 18, were each sentenced Tuesday to four years for their part in an Aug. 5 bank robbery at Donalda, Alta.

About $2,000 in cash and some Olympic lottery tickets were stolen from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce in Donalda, about 70 miles southeast of Edmonton.

WINNIPEG (CP) — A Winnipeg couple was sentenced Tuesday to nine months in jail on their second conviction this year on pornography and obscenity charges.

Frank Cecil Gardner and his wife, Rosa, both aged 45, were convicted in September of possession of obscene and pornographic matter for the purpose of sale. Rosa Gardner was also convicted of selling an obscene film.

WEYBURN, Sask. (CP) — Changes in the Western Canadian Transportation system should be decided by a body representing western organizations, the Saskatchewan Urban Municipalities Association said today.

In a brief to the Hall commission on grainhandling and transportation, the association urged creation of such a body, which would come under the Canadian Transport Commission and would make transportation decisions under guides that include assessing both economic and non-economic effects.

Man. Backs Tax Rebate Alternative

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba government will provide a grant of $45,000 to support a community program in Winnipeg that offers advances on income tax rebates, co-operative development minister Rene Toupin said Monday.

The program, now in its third year, is seen as an alternative to high-interest, quick-cash income tax discounters. It is available to individuals with an annual income of less than $8,000.

The program is expected to resume operations through Midland Credit Union early in January to handle 1975 tax returns.

Toupin said the program is necessary because of the federal government's failure to enact legislation to prohibit or restrict tax return discounting. He said some moneylenders in the core area of the city have charged between 40 and 70 per cent on income tax rebate advances.

Ottawa Won't Interfere In Potash Takeover Plan

OTTAWA (CP) — The proposed nationalization of Saskatchewan potash industries raises some concerns but no federal attempt will be made to interfere with the province's plans, Finance Minister Donald MacDonald said Tuesday.

"It's basically up to Saskatchewan to decide," he said in an interview.

He described criticism of the plan by departing U.S. ambassador William Porter as "a diplomatic gaffe" and said opposition should have been conveyed through official channels.

He said the proposal has caused anxiety in the U.S. and he indicated he would be willing to meet American business interests affected.

Reports from Washington indicated that American business interests were seeking a meeting with the minister.

Formal concern over the Saskatchewan plan was expressed last week by the U.S. state department in a diplomatic note delivered to the Canadian embassy in Washington.

It said the proposed takeover of American-owned mines in Saskatchewan might erode the confidence of foreign investors in the province, and perhaps the rest of Canada.

Macdonald said there are two main federal concerns: Ensuring a fair share of potash tax revenue for Ottawa under provincial ownership and maintaining credit for other provinces money markets.

He also said he questions the wisdom of pouring heavy investment into an existing industry such as potash. The federal choice would be to invest in new resources, he said.

He said Porter's comments, made at a weekend social gathering, tend to confirm his concern over future credit for other provinces.

Trade Minister Don Jamieson had also been told of concerns in France during a recent visit. But the decision is up to the province, he added.

He said it is premature to talk in detail of federal revenue-sharing under provincial potash ownership. But, when the time came, he would expect provincial officials to sit down and come to an agreement on the question.

The precedent for revenue-sharing in such circumstances was set during the confrontation with Saskatchewan on the sharing of tax revenue from petroleum resources, he said.

Scorn From Whelan

OTTAWA (FP) — Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan apparently hasn't a very high opinion of Statistics Canada or the Anti-Inflation Board.

In the Commons Tuesday he referred to both government agencies in the sarcastic tones which in the past he has reserved for the Food Prices Review Board which is being absorbed by the AIB.

Lorne Nystrom noted that Statistics Canada reported to the Agriculture Outlook Conference here Monday that net farm income in Canada might drop by as much as 25 per cent next year, and asked Whelan what he intends to do to prevent such a sharp drop.

"If I could predict world conditions I would also be able to say what these figures actually mean," the minister replied. "Some of the figures given last year were wrong and I am hoping they are wrong again this year. What they said was going to happen last year didn't happen."

A Little More Time

OTTAWA (FP) — Legislation affecting the future of Time and Reader's Digest will be postponed until after the Christmas recess for third reading, informed sources said here Tuesday.

Not only have Progressive Conservatives informed the government that they will be proposing several amendments but dissident Liberals have said they too will be bringing forward amendments.

$2B BORROWING BILL GETS SWIFT APPROVAL

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons gave speedy passage Tuesday to a bill allowing the government to borrow up to $2 billion for public works and other general purposes.

The legislation now goes to the Senate.

The government tried to have the borrowing authority approved last week as a clause of a bill approving $1.75 billion in supplementary spending. But the clause was ruled out of order then by Commons Speaker James Jerome.

Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said unless additional borrowing authority was approved by Parliament, the government would not be able to raise funds needed for the remainder of the 1975-76 fiscal year, which ends March 31.

All parties gave the required unanimous agreement required for the bill to go through three stages in a single day.

Macdonald said the government was seeking the increase in borrowing power before the expected Dec. 19 Christmas break because the government intends to restart a regular borrowing program through the issue of treasury bills early in the new year.

Later, in response to opposition question, Macdonald said the $2 billion has not yet been spent but will be used to cover expenses of the government in the first three months of 1976.

The government could not say what interest rate would be paid on the funds.

Canadian Fleet Backing Urged

OTTAWA (CP) — A marine union official says he favors financial incentives to entice Canadian companies to register their ships in Canada.

Robert Cook, president of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, told the Commons transport committee that these subsidies might prompt companies like Canadian Pacific and the K.C. Irving shipping enterprise to put their ships under the Canadian flag.

The 5,000-member guild represents ships' officers on both coasts and the Great Lakes.

MacMillan Bloedel, the giant British Columbia lumber company, might be induced to set up its own shipping company if these subsidies are introduced, he said. Cook said MacMillan Bloedel now uses foreign-flag vessels.

The main reason Canadian Pacific and the K.C. Irving shipping interests register their ships in foreign countries is to escape high Canadian taxes, he said.

Rather than a direct operating subsidy, Cook said he thinks there should be long-term, low-interest loans for Canadian companies to buy ships that will operate under the Canadian flag. This would help Canadian shipowners in competing with foreign shipping companies.

Like other marine unions, the Merchant Service Guild is pressing for a Canadian deep-sea merchant marine.

Cook acknowledged that shortage of trained manpower in Canada is a handicap in attempting to launch a major Canadian deep-sea merchant fleet.

RUNAWAY COW GUNNED DOWN

MILAN, Italy (UPI) — Policemen used a submachine gun barrage Tuesday to kill a runaway cow. Stray slugs from the fussilade wounded a passerby.

Police opened fire at the cow when it broke out of a slaughterhouse and dashed through the streets.

A burst of the same gunfire hit Bruno Rigotti, 43, in the side.

MPs Urge Curbs On Que. Pilots

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Otto Lang was urged Tuesday to restrict unilingual French-speaking pilots to areas in Quebec where there is bilingual air traffic control.

But in replying in the Commons to Erik Nielsen (PC — Yukon), Lang would not commit himself to such a move.

The transport minister said that "the only issue at the moment is the broad one of the pilot's basic ability to perform the functions which are required having regard to the control facilities ... which are available."

The Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, which has long been pressing for such restrictions, repeated its demands in a statement Tuesday.

Jim Livingston, CATCA president, said transport department officials recommended more than a year ago that unilingual francophone pilots be limited to areas where there is bilingual air traffic control.

In August, Livingston said there was a "nasty situation" at Toronto International Airport involving a unilingual French-speaking pilot who did not properly understand control tower instructions.

In the Tuesday statement, CATCA joined other aviation groups in protesting Lang's decision to extend the use of French in Quebec airspace.

At the moment, French and English are permitted for visual flight rule operations at five small Quebec airports. Visual rules apply generally to small aircraft and not large commercial airliners.

The transport minister said in Montreal Saturday that French will be gradually introduced at the Montreal airports of Mirabel, Dorval and St. Hubert and into instrument flight rule operations, which affect commercial airliners.

Livingston said that many French- and English-speaking controllers in the Montreal area have told him they object to Mr. Lang's plan to introduce bilingual air traffic control in their units.

A survey now is being carried out by the union in Montreal to find out the exact feelings of all controllers there, he said.

The Canadian Owners and Pilots Association and the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association also have objected to Mr. Lang's plan, arguing it will affect air safety.

There has been tension among French- and English-speaking controllers in Montreal leading to suspension of two French-language controllers for breaking existing rules by speaking French in ground communications.

★ ★ ★ RACIST COMMENTS SURFACING AGAIN

OTTAWA (CP) — Otto Jelinek (PC — High Park-Humber Valley) Tuesday asked Consumer Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet to withdraw "the racial implications that he continues to make against me."

Rising on a question of privilege, Jelinek said the minister had on several occasions accused him of being "anti-Quebec", or "anti-French Canadian" or "anti-Olympics."

Ouellet was not in the Commons at the time, but Prime Minister Trudeau said he would want to "deal with this matter very seriously.

The minister is expected to be in the House today.

Jelinek declared that: "There is no question that a pattern of not only racial overtones but direct racial accusations has developed from the minister's continued statements relating to my Olympic questioning."

Jelinek, a former Olympic skating gold medalist, said that on several occasions Ouellet had suggested that Conservative criticism of the 1976 Olympics is connected with anti-Quebec sentiment.

Frills Before Floods

OTTAWA (CP) — A Progressive Conservative member of Parliament said Tuesday the government is spending money on unnecessary frills while residents in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia are deprived of vital flood control funds.

Benno Friesen (PC — Surrey-White Rock) said government officials told him recently that flood control funds for the valley had been spent. The valley was recently hit by floods.

But at the same time, the government was spending $36,000 on new carpets for the parliamentary restaurant and the latest-mode computerized cash registers.

"There is not enough to pay for the upkeep of ditches but there is enough to pay for unused office space across the country," he said.

"I'm asking for a reordering of priorities. I'm not asking for luxuries but for safety from flooding," he said.

Pensioners Cut from UIC Plan

OTTAWA (CP) — Despite opposition from Conservatives, New Democrat and Social Credit MPs, the Commons Tuesday night approved changes to the unemployment insurance plan taking away coverage from persons aged 65 and over.

The majority Trudeau government defeated motions by both the Conservatives and the New Democrats that would have allowed older Canadians to continue to contribute to the unemployment plan and also draw benefits.

There are 140 Liberals in the 264-seat Commmons compared with 95 Conservatives, 16 New Democrats and 11 Social Crediters. There is one independent and one vacancy.

The government also defeated opposition attempts to retain special higher unemployment payments for persons with dependents.

Changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, now being debated in the Commons, will cut the special benefit rate to 66 2-3 per cent of earnings compared to the present rate of 75 per cent.

The changes, along with others increasing payments to the unemployment fund by employers and employees, are due to come into effect Jan. 1.

Debate on the changes is nearing an end in the Commons. The government is insisting it must get final parliamentary approval before MPs start their Christmas vacation, probably Friday.

Indians, Metis Sit In

OTTAWA (CP) — A group of Indians and Metis continued a sit-in Tuesday at the office of Hugh Faulkner, secretary of state, to protest a lack of funds for social services for native people.

The protesters, executives of the National Association of Friendship Centres representing 61 centres, met Monday with Faulkner but were not satisfied with progress made during the meeting and have remained in the office.

Albert Robillard, NAFC president, said Monday one-third of the centres, which have helped more than 50 per cent of all native people, will be forced to close if funds are not obtained.

A spokesman for Faulkner said the minister had promised answers on two of three demands by Friday and an answer to the third at the beginning of January.

They want a 15 per cent increase in budgets of all centres, at least $24,600 for each centre and a $30,000 grant for program development.

Friendship centres are non-political social service agencies set up to assist native peoples mirgrating to, or living in, urban areas.

TIMOR MAIL SUSPENDED

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office announced Tuesday a temporary suspension of all mail to Portuguese Timor, an island with a population of about 650,000.

The post office gave no reason for the suspension but the island, northwest of Australia, has been in civil war since August.

Jobs and Back Pay For Cassiar Five

VANCOUVER (CP) — A special officer of the British Columbia labor department has ordered reinstatement with back pay of five employees discharged by Cassiar Asbestos Corp. Ltd. in a dispute over safe working conditions.

In a report released Tuesday, Jack Sherlock, appointed under the provincial labor code to resolve the dispute, also ordered that a union-management environmental committee be established to attain acceptable levels of dust control in the area of the company's Cassiar mine, 60 miles south of the B.C.-Yukon border.

Members of the United Steelworkers of America, Local 6536, ended a strike over working conditions when Sherlock was appointed Dec. 5.

Sherlock found the workers' concern over the dust level at the operation was well supported by reports of provincial mine inspectors.

Sherlock's report also disclosed that company supervisors "neither enforced nor encouraged the wearing or respirators" and would not wear the protective equipment themselves.

Sherlock said "the employees found it difficult to get through to the company" regarding areas of concern, which also included unsafe blasting procedures and refilling of propane bottles.

"The company, on the other hand, advises me that they are doing all in their power to rectify the dust situation but that it is not an overnight proposition," Sherlock reports.

As a result, he ordered the joint committee which "would do much to assuage the fears on the part of the inhabitants of the area that nothing is being accomplished, particularly where some of these corrective measures take time to implement."

In addition Sherlock found the company's method of discipline has lead to the pyramiding of offences but it is to be abolished Jan. 1.

He ordered that a new method be commenced immediately and that no action be taken against any employee for activity arising from the dispute.

LIFE TERM FOR KILLER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Richard Schiere, 27, was sentenced Tuesday to life imprisonment for the murder of Joseph Kallin, 23, fatally shot April 6 in a lane in the city's east end.

In sentencing Schiere, Mr. Justice Gordon Rae of the British Columbia supreme court made the proviso that he must serve a minimum of 14 years before being eligible for parole.

The killing was drug-related.

Brian Boyko, 26, was sentenced earlier to life imprisonment, with a proviso that he serve 20 years before he is eligible for parole.

Hydro Proposes Grant Changes

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Hydro has proposed to the provincial inquiry commission on property assessment and taxation two major changes for the company's grant formula to municipalities and unorganized areas.

The company said in a brief Tuesday that it would pay grants to regional hospital districts on a mill rate for all its assessable land and improvements (excluding generating plants) in municipal and unorganized areas.

It now pays no grants in this area.

The company also proposed paying grants to regional districts on the same basis as for regional hospital districts.

It now provides grants in these areas for land and buildings only.

The company estimated the proposed grant revision would cost it about $800,000 additionally for regional hospital districts and $300,000 for regional districts in unorganized areas.

"B.C. Hydro is concerned about the ultimate effect of further tax or grant increases on its customers, particularly in situations where (our) activities do not cause added expense for local jurisdiction," the brief said.

"The general public benefits from the services supplied by B.C. Hydro, but its customers also share the cost of providing these services," the brief said.

New Role Urged In Forestry

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Forest Service should not be a policy-forming body and that role should be given to a new, permanent forest commission, the government-controlled Canadian Cellulose Co. Ltd. told the Pearse Commission on B.C. Forest Resources Tuesday.

Don Best, senior vice-president, operations, told Dr. Peter Pearse that the forest service should be returned to its job of being an operations agency.

Best said that policy formation should be given to a forest commission which would address itself to issues like those now being heard by Dr. Pearse.

He said that the forest service should continue to be responsible for such matters as reforestation, fire protection, engineering, research, compilation of inventory data and forest management.

The Cancel brief said that the new commission should be responsible for setting rates of return to the crown through royalty and stumpage payments paid by companies harvesting public land.

The new commission also should hear appeals arising out of disputes between the forest service and the licensees of the Crown, said the brief, along with looking at the economic shape of the forest industry, the allocation of crown timber, and resource planning and development.

Cancel also asked that no additional sawmilling capacity be created in B.C. for three to five years except in localities where there is a wood surplus or unsatisfactory utilization of the existing wood supply.

The Cancel presentation was the third made by the company to the commission, with other appearances at Prince Rupert and Nelson.

Ronald Gross, Cancel's president and chief executive officer, told Dr. Pearse that there is need for long-term stability in the public administration of B.C.'s forest resource.

Gross said that frequent changes in administrative policy have serious adverse effects on an industry which needs an assured home base if it is to compete effectively in world markets.

Ready to Sign, Firm Claims

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A spokesman for the Scott Paper plant here has denied that the firm was not prepared to offer its workers a contract based on the Hutcheon report.

Ralph Kitos, general manager, said the terms of the report and more has been offered the union.

Details of the company proposal were not available.

'Blanks in Gun' Used in Capture

VANCOUVER (CP) — Gunsmith Douglas Hough used a revolver loaded with blanks when he became involved in the capture of a gunman following a shooting incident at a hostel dormitory last March, a British Columbia Supreme Court jury was told Tuesday.

Hough was testifying in the trial of Peter Ian Wood, of Lindsay, Ont., who is charged with attempting to murder Richard Smith, Christopher Dilly, Arthur Skolnik and Paul Visosky.

Hough told the court that his gunsmith shop was broken into after the hostel shooting by a rifle-toting gunman that the crown alleges was the accused.

He said he saw a man coming through the smashed window of his shop and that the man started shooting at a passing police car using a semi-automatic rifle.

Hough said he ran into the back of his store and got a revolver loaded with blanks. He said he fired a blank at the man's face and told him to lie down on the floor.

Hough said he didn't surrender his revolver to police until a uniformed officer showed himself outside the broken front window. Then he threw the weapon out the window, he said.

The trial continues.

TINY BENNETT

Victoria Times
FOOD and nutrition

So many of us are so used to buying fish in carefully packed packages that when we get some we have to prepare from the natural state, we make a mess.

Most normal round fish such as cod, haddock, walleye, pike and trout are faily easy to handle. I usually cut the fillets off each side of the large species and then slice them into individual servings. Medium sized fish I often keep whole for baking with stuffing and the smaller ones I simply clean, remove the gills and panfry, bake or broil whole.

However, while fishing in Lake Ontario recently, I took my limit of five coho salmon, all over 10 pounds in weight with two of them around 15-16 pounds each — and this called for some careful work.

It is doubtful that many readers will have to face up to preparing 60 odd pounds of salmon but some of the problems I ran into are worth discussing.

Shortly after they are caught all fish should be cleaned the way I did my salmon. The belly slit from vent to head, the abdominal contents removed, the gills cut out and discarded, and the blood streak against the backbone scraped and washed away.

I leave heads on becasue the fish are easier to handle. After cleaning the fish are carefully washed under cold running water and dried with paper towel.

Coho salmon, like all game fish on a feeding spree before spawning, put on a lot of weight in a short time and since these are one of the really fatty fishes, it is essential to remove most of the underbelly area where this oil collects. It is easy to trim this away in two long strips using a sharp knife, cutting up to the end of the belly bones.

I feed this fine meat to my cats raw, cut into hunks, but if you pouch it before feeding it to animals, don't be surprised at the strong odor — that's the reason I urge this part to be removed.

Salmon up to about eight pounds can be cut into neat one-inch thick cutlets using a very sharp powerful knife; above that size the two big fillets each side can be carefully sliced off and then cut into boneless servings.

When I came to my two biggest fish however I really did not want to fillet them and yet found them too thick to slice into cutlets without bruising the very delicate flesh. So I put them into the deep freeze and when nice and hard I turned them into cutlets using my big meat saw.

If you have a friendly butcher, ask him to freeze and cutlet them using his power meat saw. Since he will have to completely clean off the saw after, ask first and be prepared to go in after hours so he can cut them before he cleans the saw for the day. And it helps if you ask him to take a few cutlets for himself.

I always cut off large fish heads with a generous slice of freeze and save them for fish chowders. Meaty fish heads make by far the finest chowders — rich and succulent. (When I was a kid, the only salmon my widowed mother could afford was heads and did she ever turn out great chowederS.)

Rich oily fish such as salmon, lake trout and fresh tuna are naturally very filling, so cutlets should never be too thick both for this reason and because it complicates the cooking process.

Cutlets should be at least one-inch thick, since this size is just right for broiling and won't dry up under the high heat.

TINY'S GRILLED SALMON CUTLETS

Defrost or prepare one-inch cutlets for each person, melt two tablespoons butter with two tablespoons lemon juice in a small saucepan and turn on the broiler with the rack about four inches from the heat.

Line a broiler pan with foil, lay in the cutlets and dust with a little salt and white pepper. Pour and brush the butter-lemon mix over each cutlet, and put under the broiler with the oven door propped open. After a minute or two, brush the lemon-butter on again and turn the pan around and stick it back under the heat.

When the tops of the cutlets are beautifully browned, turn over, brush with lemon butter and carry on until the second side is browned on top. You have to do this by eye but don't overcook and dry out the fish. Check by gently parting the fish in the thickest part with two forks to check if it is cooked through.

Pour the lemon butter over and serve with poached potatoes and new peas or garden green beans. This dish is so succulent and filing there is no need for fancy trimmings but my wife and I got into a bit of a happy tizzy and splurged on the wine.

Without any arugument, the wine we drank with our salmon was the best I have ever enjoyed — Bright's President Canadian Champagne at $4.95 a bottle. Properly chilled it turned our simple dinner into a feast.

Irish Stew and Dumplings

IRISH STEW

- 2 pounds stewing lamb
- 2 teaspoons salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- 1 clove garlic, crushed
- ½ teaspoon thyme
- 4 cups water
- 1 onion, sliced
- 6 medium carrots, cut in 1-inch pieces
- 6 medium potatoes, cut in eighths
- ½ cup flour

Trim fat from meat and cut meat in 1½-inch pieces. Add seasonings and water. Cover and simmer (boneless stewing lamb ¾ to 1 hour; bone-in stewing lamb 1 to 1¼ hours). Add vegetables and cook until meat and vegetables are tender, about ½ hour longer. Combine flour with a little cold water and blend into stew. Cook until thickened (about 5 minutes).

DUMPLINGS

- 2 cups sifted all-purpose flour
- 4 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ cup shortening
- 1 cup milk

Sift dry ingredients. Cut in shortening until mixture resembles coarse bread crumbs. Stir in milk to form soft dough. Drop by spoonfuls on top of hot stew. Cover and cook without lifting lid for 15 to 20 minutes. Makes 9 to 12 dumplings.

PARSLEY DUMPLINGS: Make as dumplings but sift ¾ teaspoon thyme with dry ingredients and stir in ⅓ cup chopped fresh parsley.

CURRIED DUMPLINGS: Make as dumplings but sift 1 teaspoon curry powder with dry ingredients. May be served with "Irish (Lamb) Stew."

CHRISTMAS BRAID BREAD

By MARY MOORE

Christmas morning breakfast is delayed by gift opening in most Canadian homes. Since Christmas dinner looms large in the celebrations, two meals are plenty on that day.

To make Christmas breakfast hearty and memorable a beautiful loaf of Christmas Braid Bread can be made on Christmas Eve and warmed in the oven at gift opening time. It is then not too much trouble to pour juice, make scrambled eggs and coffee.

CHRISTMAS BRAID BREAD

(Bohemian)

Dough:

- 2 pkgs. granular yeast
- 1 tsp. sugar (first amount)
- ½ c. lukewarm water
- 1 cup scalded milk
- ½ cup lukewarm water
- ½ cup sugar (second amount)
- 1 tsp. salt
- ½ cup shortening
- 2 eggs
- 4 cup sifted all-purpose flour (divided)
- 1 cup light Sultana raisins or chopped dates
- ½ tsp. mace (or nutmeg)
- 1 tsp. grated lemon rind

Topping:

- 1 cup unsifted icing sugar
- 5 level tsp. warm water
- 1 level tsp. lemon juice
- 8 red maraschino cherries halved
- 8 green maraschino cherries halved about 24 whole medium pecans or equivalent in sliced almonds.

Into large mixing bowl put yeast, sugar (first amount) and lukewarm water and let soak 10 minutes. To scalded milk add sugar (second amount), salt and shortening and cool to lukewarm. Add to risen yeast liquid along with eggs and 3½ cups of the flour and beat 100 times. Scrape down sides of bowl, cover and let rise in warm place until doubled (about 1¾ hours). Punch down dough and let rise a second time until doubled.

Sprinkle kneading board with remaining flour, turn risen dough out on it, cover with raisins or dates, mace and lemon rind and knead until all are evenly distributed through dough. If you need more flour to prevent sticking sprinkle it on board.

To shape braid cut dough into two pieces: one piece should be two-thirds of dough; the other one-third. Cut larger piece evenly into three and shape each into 18" long strips rolling them under your palms. Place about 1 inch apart on large buttered cookie sheet and braid loosely, broadening braid at centre and pinching ends together. Repeat, making shorter braid about half the size of first with remaining dough shaped into three shorter smaller strips and place on centre top of large braid, stretching and pinching its ends to ends of first braid. Glaze by brushing with mixture of 2 tablespoons EACH water and sugar. Let rise in warm place until doubled and puffy. Bake at 350 deg. Fahr. about 50/ minutes until it has a deep gold crust.

While warm drizzle with icing made of mixture of icing sugar, water and lemon juice, then decorate artistically with halved cherries and whole pecans or sliced almonds.

This should be served warm and reheats satisfactorily at 275 deg. Fahr. wrapped in foil, in about 20 to 25 minutes.

A thing of beauty and worthy of Christmas morning.

Bread Torte

- 5 eggs, separated
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 cup grated bread crumbs
- ½ teaspoon lemon juice
- 1 cup blanched almonds, slivered
- 1½ teaspoons baking powder

Beat egg yolks and sugar until very light. Soak bread crumbs in lemon juice or wine. Mix all ingredients folding in stiffly beaten egg whites at the end. Turn into two greased and floufed 9-inch layer pans. Bake in 350 Deg. Farh. oven 45 minutes. Fill with walnut filling.

TUNA SALAD

- 2 cups flaked tuna
- 4 tablespoons butter or margarine
- ½ cup mayonnaise
- ½ teaspoon lemon juice
- ¼ cup chopped celery
- ¼ teaspoon each — dry parsley, chives and tarragon
- 2 sliced hard-cooked eggs
- 4 slices whole wheat bread
- parsley sprigs

Mix together fish, herbs and butter until creamy. Add mayonnaise, lemon juice and chopped celery, blend together. Place a serving of salad on bread, top with egg slices, garnish with parsley.

New Life Block by Block

NORDEGG, Alta. (CP) — With a minimum of experience and a maximum of vision, Ken and Jim Brown have built themselves a new life, block by block.

Ken, 42, was a tire salesman. Jim, 36, sold cheese. Four years ago, deciding they had wearied of working in Calgary, they broke ground and built the David Thompson Resort.

The resort, 120 miles east of Red Deer, stands along the David Thompson Highway. It is surrounded by mountains and 20-mile-long Lake Abraham in a few hundred yards away.

The Browns, with the help of their wives and two other relatives, had to build their 24-unit motel, a 128-stall campground, store, laundromat, restaurant and garage themselves. A contractor would have charged $750,000. All they had was the money from selling their homes in Calgary, a provincial incentive loan of $300,000 and $30,000 from an oil company whose products they sell.

Asked about their ability to construct and operate a resort, Jim commented: "We both finished our own rec rooms."

The brothers and their wives put in 16-hour days, paying themselves the equivalent of 63 cents an hour per couple. They eat at the restaurant, live in trailers on the site and take no days off.

"We wanted to be on our own," Ken said. "We didn't want to work for someone else."

They began with the idea of opening a store and campground but to get a 25-year lease on the land from the agree to put up a motel as government, they had to well.

"We didn't know it was so massive when we started," Ken said.

If their salaries are not high, their net worth is at least respectable. The resort could not be bought for less than $1 million, even if someone could convince them to sell.

The brothers abound with stories of trying to persuade bank managers to provide interim financing and coping with the rigors of cutting trees, laying cement blocks and finding just the right kind of stone to set off the fireplace in the lodge.

They miss not having the free time for television and their children but couldn't face the idea of going back to plodding through life in a 9-to-5 job.

This summer was the first year the business looked as if it might break even. Snowmobile clubs and cross-country skiers should provide some winter clientele. The summer of 1974 was the first full season for the motel and the campground remains a losing proposition because it is competing with 20 free, but unserviced, government campgrounds in the area.

The motel rooms rent for $16 a night, single. There is no television, radio or telephone. "By the time we hear about the current crisis, it's over." The 45-acre site is dominated by the scenery.

The location provides a stop-over for tourists making a circle tour from either Calgary or Edmonton through Banff or Jasper National Park. With heavy pressure on facilities in the parks, the resort also benefits from the overflow.

dear abby

Swearing Off

DEAR ABBY: I am a divorcee of almost two years. I'm constantly meeting guys who swear they're not married, but later I find out that they are and they usually have children.

What is it with these dingalings, anyway? Don't they know they just might hurt innocent gals who might fall in love with them because they think they're available?

I want nothing to do with a married man. I wish these creeps would stay home with their wives and leave us single women alone!

I just got a phone call from some guy's wife who threatened me if I didn't leave her husband alone. Abby, so help me, I didn't know the man was married.

How about a few suggestions on how to spot these creeps? HAD IT

DEAR HAD IT: A married man will not give you his home telephone number and address. He will be very short of friends to whom he can introduce you — and will almost always have no relatives for you to meet. He'll be unavailable for weekends and holidays, and when he's with you, he'll look at his watch a lot.

If a man tells you he's "going through a divorce," tell him you'll see him when his divorce is final. (Maybe!)

DEAR ABBY: What is a healthy, 34-year-old married man supposed to do when he has become physically handicapped but his sexual feelings continue to function the same as before? Because of my physical limitations, I am partially paralyzed. I am unable to walk or use my legs, but my sexual desires are in no way impaired.

I don't know anyone else I can ask, so please don't throw this letter into the wastebasket. You may print it if you think it will help others in my plight, but please don't use my name. HANDICAPED IN FLORIDA

DEAR HANDICAPPED: Your local Easter Seal Society (listed in your telephone book under Florida Society for Crippled Children and Adults) can provide you with information and instruction. Those in other states should contact their state societies. Also, most universities have Human Sexuality programs that offer instruction for people with your problem.

KIMCHI: ULTIMATE IN SEOUL FOOD

SEOUL, Korea (UPI) — When I lived in Japan I worried about the future of a people who ate seaweed and threw away turnip greens because they considered them inedible.

As an East Tennessean, I was raised on turnip greens.

I couldn't understand how the Japanese could throw away the greens and eat only the turnip, a vegetable as uninteresting in Toyko as it was in Knoxville.

The Japanese made out just fine, however, so now I have turned my concern to the dietary habits of the Koreans, who eat kimchi, a fiery side dish of vegetables pickled with red peppers and garlic.

No Korean meal is complete without kimchi. It is the ultimate in Seoul food.

It is estimated that this year the almost seven million residents of this capital city will devour 114,000 tons of cabbage, the staple ingredient of kimchi.

But it is the 4,600 tons of red peppers and 2,480 tons of garlic that go into Seoul's annual kimchi production that makes eating the stuff a character-building experience.

All who eat kimchi emit a powerful odor when they breathe outward. This presents no problem because just about everyone — foreigners included — eats kimchi.

They eat it because they like it, not necessarily in self-defence.

This is the seaosn for making winter kimchi.

The markets here are filled with women in brightly colored Korean dress sniffing red peppers and squeezing those oblong Chinese cabbages some call celery cabbage.

There are many recipes for kimchi, but all Korean housewives employ special touches which give their own an individual flavor.

In addition to cabbage, garlic and red peppers, kimchi often contains in various combinations, turnip, cucumber, spinach, onions, parsley and ginger. Fruit and fish can be thrown in for extra pungency.

When the ingredients are mixed they are placed in a large earthenware jar and allowed to ferment for a month or so.

If that sounds like a recipe for acid indigestion, it also should be reported that kimchi constitutes the main sources of Vitamin C in the Korean diet.

It is estimated that a housewife of a five-member family will buy about 100 cabbage heads, as well as the other ingredients, to produce winter kimchi.

About 100 woman hours are required to make the stuff, which in its final stage becomes reddish orange and is sliced into small chunks served in small dishes at all meals.

No one is certain when the Koreans started eating kimchi.

The Chinese may have had a hand in it when they introduced red peppers and garlic to the Korean peninsula about 2,000 years ago.

My wife Carobel, a South Carolinian who once talked bemused Tokyo grocers into saving their turnip greens for her rather than throwing them out, sampled kimchi last weekend during her first trip to the Republic of Korea.

"Delicious," she said, chopsticking several varieties from the food-laden table.

I followed suit. Not necessarily in self-defence.

Yule Safety Tips

Because Christmas is such an exciting and busy time, it is very easy to forget that "ounce of prevention" normally considered for around the home. With this thought in mind, the B.C. Safety Council offers the following home safety checklist.

The Natural Tree

—Do not rely only on chemical coatings or sprays to flame-proof your tree. Follow these safety rules as well.

—A "fresh" tree is less of a fire hazard than a dry tree (a fresh tree is green, needles are hard to pull from the branches and they do not break when bent between your fingers.)

—Place tree carefully — away from the fireplace, radiators or other heat sources. It should be out of the way of traffic and not block doorways.

—Cut two inches off the trunk. Mount tree in a sturdy, water-holding stand with wide spread legs. Fasten large trees to walls or ceilings with thin guy wires.

—Fill base holder with water and keep full of water while tree is indoors.

The Trimmings

—Only use non-combustable or flame retardant materials

—Choose tinsel of plastic or non-leaded metals (leaded materials are hazardous if ingested by children, pets)

—Avoid trimmings that resemble candy or food — a child could eat them!

—Wear gloves while decorating with spun glass "angle hair" — it can irritate eyes or skin

—Artificial snow sprays contain additives that can irritate the lungs if inhaled. To avoid injury, read container labels and follow directions carefully.

Candles

—Never use lighted candles on a tree or near other evergreens

—Always use non-flammable holders

—Place candles where they cannot be knocked down

—Keep away from other decorations and wrapping paper.

Paper

—When making paper decorations, look for materials labelled "Flame Proof"

—Remove all wrapping papers from tree and fireplace areas immediately after presents are opened. Place papers in a metal covered trash barrel or burn them in an incinerator.

Health Expert's Helpful Hints On How To Be Good Party Host

LONG GROVE, Ill. (UPI) — A health expert who believes that the host of a party should be a friend and not a "mad bomber" who loads the drinks of unsuspecting guests has some helpful hints for the holiday season.

John Lavino, calls cocktail parties "the biggest drug ring in the country."

"People at cocktail parties are often strangers to each other who are a little tense or ill at ease, and often hungry," Lavino said. "The hosts are too busy running the party to mingle properly and introduce strangers.

"The result can be boredom which promotes prolonged drinking at a pace that is often faster than normal while the hosts push strong drinks at anyone whose glass is beginning too look empty."

Lavino offers these tips to holiday hosts:

Don't serve doubles without a person's knowledge and don't push refills.

Keep people eating. Be sure hors d'oeuvres or snacks are served right from the start to the party's conclusion.

Offer a variety of soft drinks and fruit juices.

Be a friend, not just a bartender. Be sure to introduce people and get conversations started so guests don't just sit and drink.

If someone gets drunk, it's the host's responsibility to see that he or she gets home safely. The only remedy for sobering up someone is time.

"The cocktail party started out as a chance to meet people and get friends and acquaintances together," Lavino said. "Too often it degenerates into an excuse to get drunk."

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

New High Fibre Diet Mixes Fact, Fantasy

By DR. JEAN MAYER

Each year seems to bring a new fad in diets, and the current one — the high fibre diet — is a curious mix of fact and fantasy. One new book goes as far as to proclaim fiber as an essential new nutrient: vitamin R, for roughage.

I, myself, believe that fibre is a highly useful component of a good diet and that we need more of it in the typical North American menu. But I also think it is important to separate fact from fantasy when talking about fibre. Fibre is not a vitamin. And for us humans (who have only one stomach), it does not supply any nutrients. What, then, is it?

Actually, fibre is a catch-all word for several hard substances that support and protect the walls and cells of plants. Animals with four stomachs, such as cattle and sheep, have up to 50 pounds of microbes in their rumen that break down the various elements in fibre into digestible carbohydrates.

But in our stomachs, fibre is separated from digestible subtance, and it passes through the intestines more or less unchanged. But it is in this passage through the intestines that fibre exerts its most beneficial effect for humans.

In our diet, the main sources of roughage are the outer husks of any grain (usually wheat bran) and the fibres from vegetables, such as cooked spinach or raw carrot. Roughage adds bulk to the stool, making it larger, and absorbs moisture, making it softer.

Two sets of intestinal mucles — one running the length of the intestine and the other, a series of circles around its' inner wall — propel the stool. A large, soft stool moves almost twice as fast as the smaller and harder ones produced by low-fibre diets.

There is reason to believe that after years of hard straining and tight contractions to push chronically small, hard stolls along, the intestinal muscles become overdeveloped in some spots and thin and weak in areas where the two sets come together. Tiny pouches, called diverticula, form in these areas. When these pouches fill with bits of feces and become infected, diverticulitis develops.

Recent studies here and in England have shown that a diet with sufficient roughage relieves the symptoms of diverticula in many patients and tends to prevent, or at least delay, its recurrence.

Many medical researchers also feel that a low-fibre stool may be linked to cancer of the colon, one of the most frequent causes of cancer death in the United States. Dr. Denis Burkitt, the British cancer specialist who identified a new form of cancer in African children, called "Burkitt's lymphoma," has also gathered a wealth of data showing a rise in colon cancer among certain populations (Africans, Japanese, rural black Americans) who have adopted an urbanized or Western style of living.

Among these groups, the traditional diet has been replaced by our typical fare, which is high in fat, meats and refined carbohydrates and low in fruits, vegetables and whole grains — the very foods that are highest in fibre.

Dr. Burkitt and other researchers suggest that a slow-moving stool contains increased numbers of the normal intestinal bacteria that break down bile acids and thus release some cancer-producing substances. In a small, hard stool, there carcinogens are more concentrated, move more slowly and have more time to work their way into the intestine. Hence, Dr. Birkett believes that low-fibre diets are linked to a higher incidence of intestinal cancer.

A number of researchers have suggested that a low-fibre diet may also be implicated in atherosclerosis, diabetes and obesity. While these theories are still unproved, we do know enough about the relationship between a high-fibre diet and intestinal health to say that adding more fibre to the typical North American diet is a good thing.

BURNT SUGAR RICE PUDDING

½ cup raw long grain rice
1¼ cup boiling water
¼ Tsp. salt
3 cup milk
1 cup raisins
1 Tsp. grated lemon rind
¾ tsp. freshly grated nutmeg
Tsp. almond extract
3 eggs
6 Tbsp. brown sugar (first ¾ amount) cup brown sugar (second amount)
¼ cup chopped almonds or cashews

Cook the rice in the boiling water with the salt, covered, ½ hour or until tender. Add the cooked rice and the raisins to the milk and bring just to boil. Remove from heat and add the grated lemon rind, nutmeg and almond extract.

Beat the eggs with the 6 tablespoons brown sugar and stir in to milk-rice mixture. Pour into buttered medium-large baking dish, stand in shallow pan of boiling water and bake 1 hour at 325 Deg. Fahr. (This is beautiful and could be served hot at this stage.) Cool. Chill. When chilled sprinkle top with the ¾ cup brown sugar and nuts. Pass under preheated broiler burner for ONE MINUTE — just long enough to melt and bubble the brown sugar. Watch it for this is risky business and will burn if you turn your back. Remove, cool and chill. Serve cold.

Old-fashioned dessert lovers should file this recipe for present and future reference.

Finland Budget Hits Smokers And Moforists

HELSINKI (Reuter) — Smokers, motorists and higher-income earners have been hit hard by Finland's new coalition government in its budget for 1976.

Smokers will pay 20 per cent more, gasoline goes up eight cents a gallon and diesel oil four cents. Tax relief promised on incomes of more than $10,000 will be cut, and private motorists will also pay an extra duty of between $24 and $76 on their vehicles.

Olympics, Liquor Scandal Linked

JIGSAW PUZZLE from B.C.'s history is keeping Ron Williams, assistant conservationist at the University of British Columbia, busy as he pieces together parts of a 50-foot totem pole carved around 1870. This exceptionally fine example of art will stand in the new museum of anthropology at UBC.

QUEBEC (CP) — The special Olympics adviser to Quebec's finance minister was linked by the opposition Parti Quebecois Tuesday to Operation Z, the police investigation of an alleged profiteering scheme involving the Quebec Liquor Corporation.

Marc-Andre Bedard (PQ — Chicoutimi) suggested that the adviser, Jean-Noel Richard, is the main shareholder in a firm that had reaped "substantial profits" in the alleged scheme.

The firm allegelly intervened in transactions previously handled directly between the liquor board and a regular supplier.

Bedard suggested.

The firm, Les Importations Pelarin Ltee., was set up shortly after the April, 1970, provincial election which brought Premier Robert Bourassa's Liberals to power for the first time.

Richard was then secretary-general of the Quebec Liberal Federation, renamed the Quebec Liberal Party in 1972, Bedard said.

Bedard dropped the information in the national assembly as he continued to grill Solicitor-General Fernand Lalonde, asking why no charges have been laid in relation to last summer's investigation of the liquor board by the Quebec police commission inquiry into organized crime.

Lalonde, repeating statements he made in the assembly last week, said that the crime inquiry had turned the liquor board matter over to the justice department, recommending further police investigation.

He said a legal adviser to the justice department, Francois Tremblay, later suggested that no criminal charges be laid until completion of the police investigation, codenamed Operation Z.

Lalonde said the seven or eight policemen on the project should complete their work next month. He refused to give any names, saying he would not fall into the opposition's trap by releasing the contents of the secret report in the assembly.

If he were to mention the name of a distillery involved in the report, Lalonde said, "... think of the harm I can do to the firm without even knowing in what context its name was mentioned."

Premier Bourassa decried the affair, saying "trial balloons over trail balloons," before being called to order by the Speaker.

Doctor Strike Continues

LONDON (Reuter) — Leaders of Britain's 19,000 junior doctors decided Tuesday to keep up for at least another week an "emergencies-only" strike that has brought chaos to the state-run hospital service.

The doctors' representatives, meeting to discuss a peace plan thrashed out last week with Health Minister Barbara Castle, decided they needed more clarification from the government on certain points.

The representatives said they would meet in a week's time to consider calling off the strike in the dispute about overtime pay.

Icelandic Issue Before UN

UNITED NATIONS (Reuter) — Britain vacated the presidency of the UN Security Council and appealed to Iceland on Tuesday to resume negotiations on the bitter fish dispute between the two countries.

"We are confident that, with goodwill, the gap between us can be bridged," British Ambassador Ivor Richard said.

The council session had been called at Iceland's request following an incident last week involving a British fisheries protection vessel and an Icelandic patrol ship.

The British delegate is president of the council this month, but because of his country's involvement, he vacated the chair.

It was only the second time in the history of the United Nations that this has happened. The first time also involved a British president when, in 1968, Lord Cardon stepped down during a debate on Rhodesia.

The troubles between Britain and Iceland concern Iceland's unilaterally-declared restriction on fishing within 200 miles of its coasts.

Iceland says recent extensions of fishing limits from 12 and 50 miles is to conserve fish stocks and protect the country's vital fishery interests.

Britain says the area is a traditional fishing zone for British trawler fleets.

HAPPINESS IS . . . SOUTHPAW STORE

MILWAUKEE — A new, one-room store in suburban Glendale looks like many modern boutiques, but it will feel wrong to about 90 per cent of the population.

The Left Hand Ltd. caters exclusivly to southpaws.

Proprietress Lynn Sherkow said she opened the store recently, in part, because of problems she has experienced for 29 years.

"As a child, they tried to make me write with my right hand, which was just impossible," she remembered. "And I always had trouble with scissors had to hold them upside down — and I'd end up with a baseball mitt on my right hand while catching the ball in my left."

Items for sale include greeting cards that open from the left and corkscrews that must be turned counterclockwise.

There are oven mitts with asbestos on the left-hand palm and rulers with the one-inch mark on the right and the 12-inch to the left.

Beating Mystery A New Dimension In Quinlan Case

TRENTON, N.J. — A grand jury has been empanelled to investigate the possibility that Karen Ann Quinlan may have been beaten the night she lapsed into a drug and alcohol coma, it was disclosed Tuesday. A spokesman for Attorney-General William Hyland said doctors and investigators have been puzzled by bruises on Miss Quinlan's body and the source of drugs which she consumed.

HONG KONG — Kang Sheng, one of China's "outstanding leaders," died in Peking Tuesday after a long illness. He was 77. Kang had been a Chinese Communist party member since 1925. Since the mid-50s he specialized in liaison with foreign Communist parties and was one of the party's most active leaders in the Sino-Soviet dispute.

LONDON — Rex Harrison's four-year marriage to his fifth wife, Elizabeth, was dissolved today. Mrs. Harrison, 39, was granted a divorce because of Rex's "unreasonable behavior." The hearing took 10 minutes and Harrison was not present. The former Mrs. Harrison was earlier married to actor Richard Harris.

Harrison's previous wives included actresses Lili Palmer, Rachel Roberts and the late Kay Kendall.

Ex-policewoman Pat Pooley, 34, explained: "I joined to specialize as a woman police officer — I don't want to be liberated." New laws enforcing equal rights for women in many jobs come into effect on Dec. 29. The title "policewoman" will be dropped as well as special police sections dealing with mothers, children and domestic problems.

SEATTLE — Bob Cummings was arrested Tuesday on charges of using an electronic gadget to cheat the telephone company of at least $4,500 in long distance charges. Cummings, 65, was released on his personal recognizance after a brief court appearance. The actor was booked after police went to his apartment with a search warrant and found a "blue box." The actor had allegedly used the box between Oct. 9 and Dec. 16.

WASHINGTON — John Stevens was assured of confirmation today as a U.S. supreme court justice, succeeding William Douglas who retired Nov. 12 because of poor health.

LOS ANGELES — Preston Michael Mayo, one of two men charged last September in an aborted plot to assassinate President Ford the same day Lynette Fromme pointed a gun at him, pleaded guilty Tuesday to a lesser charge of threatening the president. Sentencing was set for Jan. 5.

CAMBRIDGE, England — Three female police officers here have resigned — because they do not want equal treatment with men under new laws against sex discrimination. "The women who left did so because they didn't like integration with the duties and hours of men," Police Chief Frederick Porter said.

Dubois Ran Hull Drugs

MONTREAL (CP) — The tentacles of the Montreal-based Dubois gang reached the Hull, Que., area where the group controlled the lucrative drug-trafficking market, the Quebec police commission inquiry was told Tuesday.

Sgt. Gilles Poissant, an 18-year veteran RCMP drug investigator, testified that the Dubois brothers supplied hashish, marijuana, speed and LSD to the area through dealers.

The RCMP began an investigation into the racket following the murder of Conrad Carre, "a well-known trafficker" in the area, Poissant said.

The investigation, which led to 20 arrests, uncovered a group of traffickers "which defended its exclusive rights on the territory with violence when necessary" and which was "almost exclusively supplied (with drugs) by the Dubois brothers," Poissant said.

Two of those arrested, Claude Lesage and Claude Marinier, were tied to the Dubois operation through wiretapped telephone conversations entered as evidence by police.

The testimony about the nine Dubois brothers, cited earlier before the inquiry as underworld leaders in several areas of Montreal, was the first indication the gang operated outside the city.

Poissant told the inquiry that among drugs supplied to the Hull area by the Dubois gang was "deadly LSD," passed off as mescaline which has a softer effect. He said other chemicals, including arsenic and strychnine, were sometimes added to the LSD and cocoa or chocolate powder to give it a more favorable color.

Meanwhile, Normand, Jean-Paul and Donald Dubois were accorded suspensions of their subpoenas to appear before the inquiry pending a Supreme Court of Canada ruling on the inquiry's constitutionality.

And, the Quebec Court of Appeal upheld suspension of a subpoena ordering Vincenzo (Vic) Cotroni to testify before the inquiry until 10 days after the Supreme Court delivers its ruling.

The inquiry resumes today.

Cities Going to the Dogs Because of Crime

WASHINGTON (AP) — The urban-crime wave in the U.S. is creating a new public-health crisis as more city dwellers acquire big guard dogs to protect their homes and families, says New York City's canine expert.

Dr. Alan Beck, director of the city's bureau of animal affairs, said the larger breeds inflict more severe bites, consume more food that could go to human populations, spread disease and aggravate the urban waste problem.

The estimated 500,000 dogs in New York City alone dump about 187 tons of droppings daily onto the streets and sidewalks and into the sewer system, he said in the December issue of the American Journal of Public Health.

"Such fecal contamination is a public health problem that would not be tolerated from any other mammalian source," Beck said.

He said it was time something was done about the problem.

He pointed to Paris where dogs are reluctantly learning to use new bath toilets in the streets. About eight have been erected around the French capital in an effort to help keep the streets clean.

Beck said there is evidence that the U.S. dog population is levelling off at about 33 million, or one for every 5.9 persons, but man's best friend in 38 per cent of U.S. households is increasingly becoming larger, hungrier, and more ferocious.

"This trend may be motivated by the public's awareness of urban crime and the hope that larger dogs will warn and protect their owners," Beck said.

DAVID BOWIE'S CHANGED his mind again. After swearing he'd never do another tour ("I've rocked my roll," he told us earlier this year), he's decided on at least one more. The 34-city, U.S.-Canada swing will begin Feb. 2 in Vancouver and will end March 26 in New York. Europe and Far East dates will follow.

Why did Bowie reconsider this time? "Because I'm going to make an obscenely large amount of money, which I desperately need to set up my film company, Bewley Brothers," David replied.

"I'll work with a very small band, the same one I used on 'Station to Station' (Bowie's next album, due in January), with no set whatsoever. I'm just going to go out and sing, and not give myself the burden of an enormous production." Those musicians, by the way, are Earl Slick, lead guitar; "Fame" co-writer Carlos Alomar, rhythm guitar; Dennis Davis, drums; and George Murray, bass.

Bowie announced his tour during a satellite TV interview with Russell Harty, Britain's Johnny Carson. Apparently, David picked a choice time to reserve the satellite facility — the Spanish government wanted the same line at the same time to broadcast General Franco's funeral mass. When informed the time was taken, Spanish officials were so upset that they reportedly asked the White House to intercede.

WHEN STANFORD STUDENT and Sears-Roebuck heir Monte Stern applied for a permit to stage rock concerts on the 600-acre ranch he's leased west of Woodside, about 25 miles south of San Francisco, the last neighbor he thought he'd tangle with was Neil Young. But Neil, who's played in a few outdoor festivals in his time, was so up in arms at the idea that he spoke up at a recent hearing on the permit.

"He really surprised me," said Donald Woolfe, San Mateo County planning director. "Here comes this big rock star in a suede jacket. You'd think he's going to support this idea. But then he describes drug overdoses he's seen backstage and how if 50 guys want in, they'll come in whether you have cops or not. It was all very interesting."

Interesting, perhaps, but not heartening to Stern, who's already spent $13,000 on sound and soil tests for the proposed concert site. Action on the permit has been stalled by the objections of Young and other neighbors, and now the Kings Mountain Association, which represents most of the homeowners in the area, has voted to notify the commission of its opposition.

"We're not going to pull another Altamont or Woodstock here," said Paul Grushkin, a promoter pal of Stern's, smarting from all the hubbub. "We've planned the whole thing. But for Neil Young to come off sounding like the wounded property owner worried about bike gangs kind of gets to us."

AMERICAN CONFETTI: Dick Clark has set his lineup for his annual "New Year's Rockin' Eve" show on ABC-TV, and it's a good, showbizzy one. Neil Sedaka will host, with K. C. and the Sunshine Band, Freddy Fender, Melissa Manchester, and the Average White Band as guests. Good and show-bizzy, but by no means "rockin'."

But it does, come to think of it, reflect 1975's music output pretty accurately.

SHORTS: Traffic has officially broken up, but the parting appears amiable. Both guitarist Steve Winwood and reed player Chris Wood are featured on drummer Jim Capaldi's third solo album, set for January release. It's called "Short Cut Draw Blood," a Jamaican phrase meaning "the easy way out is often dangerous" . . . Barbra Streisand, reportedly unhappy with some of the tunes Rupert Holmes had written for her next movie, "A Star is Born," has asked Paul Williams and Kenny Ascher to compose additional songs . . . Quote of the week: Corky Laing, ex-drummer for West, Bruce and Laing and, lately, Leslie West, called to say it was time he shed his anonymity and struck out on his own music projects. "Drummers are like the women of the world, or left tackles; who cares about them?"

MARTIN MULL is now writing his Bicentennial gift to America. It's a screenplay called "My Country Tis of Thee," which traces America from Christopher Columbus to the Civil War. "We treat events with as much reverence as Monty Python gave to the Knights of the Round Table," said Mull. The "we" includes fellow scriptwriters Steve Martin, Harry Shear of the Credibility Gap, and Peter Elbing, formerly of the Times Square Two. "We've all managed to write in parts that only we can play," Mull added. "You could call it rampant nepotism."

KISSES

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

During a recent duplicate game, a husband and wife were defending a hand. Each time the lady made a play, her husband would shake his head sadly. Finally she said: "Don't shake your head at me!" At which point one of the opponents (the dummy) made out an M.C.P. badge, and gave it to the man.

"What's that?" the lady asked. "It's a Male Chauvinist Pig badge," said the opponent. "Oh," she said, "I thought it meant 'My Criticizing Partner.'"

Had the lady been sitting in the East seat in today's deal, her partner would have had no cause to criticize her play. As a matter of fact, at the conclusion of the deal he would have had reason to stand up and applaud.

Neither side vulnerable. North deals.

Opening lead: Ten of ♣.

After winning the opening lead with the club queen, South led the ten of hearts and finessed, losing to East's king. East returned the spade queen, South taking it with his ace.

Declarer now led a heart to the ace, West discarding a club. The ace of diamonds was cashed next, followed by the cashing of the king and ace of clubs. On these two tricks East discarded the five and seven of spades. South then took his spade king, upon which East followed with the eight.

East was known to have started with five hearts. He also figured to have five spades: when he led the spade queen at trick three, he rated to also have the jack. When compelled to make two discards on the clubs, he had tossed away the five and seven of spades. And when declarer cashed the spade ace, East had followed suit with the eight. So East still retained the spade jack (the fifth spade).

Since East had just one club, he had started with but two diamonds. West, who had started with four diamonds, therefore figured to have the diamond jack. So declarer now led a diamond, finessing dummy's ten — and went down two tricks.

East's deliberate discards of two spades, to let declarer know that he possessed five spades (and five hearts) was a magnificent seduction of declarer, which talked the latter into taking the losing finesse. East could have, instead, tossed away two worthless hearts, and "deprived" declarer of a "count" of East's hand.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"How did you make out in the test?" asked Joe, seeing the twins come in from school. "The usual twenty questions, eh?"

"Not that many this time, Dad," replied Jack. "I got two thirds of them right, but between us we had all but three right."

The other boy shook his head. "Tough," he said. "I did get more than half right, but I was way out on the other eight."

Denver to Retire Little's Jersey

DENVER (AP) — Denver Broncos will retire Floyd Little's No. 44 jersey at a special game in Little's honor next summer, officials of the National Football League club have announced.

Club owner Gerald Phipps said a pre-season game will be designated the Floyd Little Youth Benefit Game.

Gas Swap 'Impracticable'

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's largest pipeline company has rejected suggestions that the need for a northern pipeline can be delayed by increasng production in Alberta.

TransCanada Pipe Lines Ltd., a member of industry groups planning pipelines from both the Mackenzie River delta and the Arctic Islands, said it has studied that solution but found it impracticable.

"We think it is imperative that frontier gas be made available at the earliest possible date," company chairman James Kerr told a meeting of the Commons national resources committee.

Westcoast Transmission Co., a member of a rival group planning a delta pipeline, earlier suggested that a northern pipeline can be delayed by swapping gas with Alberta—using gas from the province now at a faster than normal rate and replacing it with frontier gas when a pipeline is built.

But TransCanada, the sole supplier of western gas to the major eastern markets, says that won't work. Companies would find it difficult to justify installing new production facilities only for a short time and, in any case, it would be difficult to maintain production from the older fields in the province.

The company added that even if that were possible, Alberta would require "ironclad guarantees" that the gas would be replaced. That couldn't be done until a northern pipeline received approval.

The comments came as the committee continued its review of frontier oil and gas prospects, including an array of posssible pipelines into the North.

Two groups—Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Ltd. and Foothills Pipeline Ltd.—already have filed rival applications with the national energy board for a Mackenzie River delta pipeline.

A third consortium, Polar Gas, plans to file an application in 1977 for the right to build a line from the Arctic Islands.

TransCanada, a founding member of both Arctic Gas and Polar Gas, told the committee it feels Arctic Gas is the fastest way to get the delta reserves to market.

The company proposal includes moving Alaska gas to United States markets, which it says is the only way to make the project economically attractive.

There just isn't enough gas in the delta to justify a Canadian-only line proposed by Foothills, Kern told the committee.

It is also said the third proposal—a polar line—should follow the Mackenzie delta project by about two years. It cannot be built at the same time because of difficulties raising sufficient capital and finding enough construction workers.

The company also said it is against building the polar line first, saying that would discourage exploration in the delta and force the Americans to seek other methods to move Alaska gas, such as a proposal to turn it into liquid and use tankers.

If that happened, delta gas would be "hived off" until enough was found to justify a Canada-only pipeline.

Kerr also said in his opening statement that he is closely watching developments off the East Coast, where promising gas finds have been made off Labrador and there are some indications of deposits off Nova Scotia.

"We are ready with preliminary studies of pipelines from that area to be advanced if and when sufficient reserves are developed," he told the committee.

Plastics Cancer Target

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Tuesday proposed regulations to cut by 90 per cent the amount of cancer-causing vinyl chloride gas to which 4.6 million people are exposed in factory areas.

The agency said there was a public health risk in the current exposure level and the new rules will reduce the nearly 20 cases of cancer which occur every year due to exposure to vinyl chloride — a raw material of the plastic industry.

The Society of the Plastics Industry said it does not believe "there is any current, nor has there been in the past, risk to the health of individuals residing in the proximity" of the plants. But it said the producers of the chemical "agree that rigorous emission controls are in the public interest."

The EPA also said that four plants employing a total of 30 people have indicated they will close rather than make the necessary changes and that a fifth plant has already indicated it will close next March because it cannot meet labor department rules to reduce the exposure to factory workers.

EPA administrator Russel Train said the cost to plants which produce vinyl chloride, ethylene, dichloride and polyvinyl chloride will total $198 million, with an additional $70 million being required each year to keep up the control.

GARDENING

Success with Non-Drainage Pots

Planters, pots and tubs without drainage holes have been hard for some of us to accept yet they have been successfully used by amateur gardeners.

An article in a new 24-page issue of The Balcony Gardener by the local Green Thumb Club is titled Flowers in Planters without Drainage. This is personal experience of a club member.

The booklet is now for sale to the public at around one dollar in some plant outlets and garden shops in the city.

All members of the Green Thumb Club are balcony gardeners, and I would add "successful" balcony gardeners. They have enthusiasm and the initiative which rejects limitations until they are proved insurmountable. We find north facing balconies as bright with flowers in summer as the southerners — and they don't dry out so quickly.

Ways to combat wind have been devised while admitting that some plants are not possible. Large leaf surfaces for instance are known to offer more wind resistance than narrow leaflets.

A palm, an acacia and a pine are more able to survive gales than large leaved maple, horsechestnut or rhododendron. These large solid leaves with their resistance become shredded by constant wind.

To go back to planters without drainage. The findings and experiences can be applied equally to flower pots indoors and tubs. I would like to point out from observation of watering among average indoor gardeners, that the methods described here should be gradually introduced with one or two plants for a trial period of several months, even a year.

The Green Thumber writes "This method may be contrary to all garden books, but it works for me . . . I lined the planters with two-ply plastic, filled them with garden soil and planted petunias, impatiens and tuberous begonias."

The writer does not mention a layer of stones or other open material in the bottom of the plastic lining so probably it was not used.

"The secret of success with non drainage" continues the Green Thumber "is not to water too much, otherwise the soil becomes waterlogged." It's as simple as that.

Learning that delicate balance between sufficient water, too little, and too much, is a matter of trial, observation and finally, experience. Apparently anyone can learn if the need to grow plants is recognized and indulged in.

Testing the soil for dampness just below the surface of the planter is no different to the testing outdoors around or between plants. A small tool of teaspoon size will do least damage.

Choose a spot furthest from where roots are likely to be and dig down about an inch, bringing up a little soil from that depth. According to its state of moisture or dryness you judge the soil moisture lower down around the roots, and you either water or don't water according to what you find.

Knowing the moisture needs of various plants is a great idea too. This results partly from observing where you see them growing well in parks and gardens and partly from knowing the native habitats of the genus (class) to which your plants belong.

The first issue of The Balcony Gardener came out in November 1974. Now a year later a new issue appears with a new look of greater stability, some added articles of great interest to balcony gardeners, and as a choice item the closing notation headed Bird Bonus which I quote in full:

"Two balconies reported that purple finches had chosen them as nesting sites, one in a potted shrub nine stories up, the other in a sturdy geranium six stories up; each raised five nestlings."

Last-Ditch Bid By CYC Leaders

OTTAWA (CP) — The Company of Young Canadians (CYC), on the eve of federal budget cuts that may bring it to an end, defended itself today as the only government agency with a mandate to help the poor and unorganized.

"We really don't believe the government will do it," Montreal lawyer Simon Noel, chairman of the company's board of directors, said of rumors the company will be a victim of fiscal restraints and may be legislated out of existence.

He told a news conference that the government, if it chopped the CYC budget, would be running counter to the statement of Jean Chretien, treasury board president, that anti-inflation measures would be aimed at protecting the poor and the unorganized.

Noel said the company has tried, since rumors began on Dec. 1, to find out from government whether they are true and there has been no official confirmation or denial.

As a result, the CYC council last Saturday resolved that operations be continued until April 1 under funds already voted to it by Parliament and that operations continue after that either with money received from Parliament or from private gifts or bequests.

Saanich Pay Hike Up to B.C.

Bill Bennett's new government will decide whether the 12.4 per cent pay hike Saanich council voted itself this week is legal, a Revenue Canada official said today.

The spokesman said Bennett's government will have to decide whether British Columbia will back the federal government pay increase ceilings to be published Thursday.

A last-minute item on the agenda of this week's council meeting hiked the members' pay by 12.4 per cent, contrary to the federal government's 10 per cent ceiling. The increase is retroactive to Jan. 1.

Mayor Ed Lum's salary goes from $15,000 to $16,680 and the aldermen will receive $5,400 instead of $4,800.

The Revenues Canada spokesman said municipalities are under provincial jurisdiction, not the federal government.

"The provincial government hasn't committed itself to follow the federal guidelines 100 per cent," the spokesman said, "They may decide to make their own."

He said the fact that most Saanich aldermen have other full-time jobs is immaterial.

"If the federal ceilings were made to apply, this would mean a restriction of 10 per cent increases on both jobs," he explained.

N. Saanich Approves Rec Vote

The proposed $3.8 million recreation complex on the Saanich Peninsula moved a step closer to reality this week when North Saanich council finally approved an early referendum.

Central Saanich and Sidney councils had both earlier approved taking a spring referendum, but North Saanich had balked, first trying to pare down the complex and then requesting that the other two councils share in road repair expenses which would result from the construction of the project.

Council had earlier debating putting the complex to referendum in a scaled down form, but Ald. George Cumpston said this week that if residents want the project, they will vote for it while those opposed to it would not change their stand for a smaller amount.

The complex is to be built near John Dean Park on East Saanich Road and the referendum question is expected to go to Peninsula voters in the early spring.

When You Gotta Go, The Boss Can Say No

MONTREAL (UPI) — A group of chicken-plucking employees of a Quebec company has launched battle against their employers "toilet policy rules" that has led to the firing of one employee and the suspension of 54 others.

The 54 employees returned to work Wednesday after serving two-day suspensions for protesting a new program that limits the number of times, when and how long they may use washrooms.

"Another employee was fired and 10 more were reprimanded during the same dispute," Paul Andre Laviolette, union spokesman for the 180 employees of the Quebec Poultry Co. Ltd. said.

The new rules allow employees only two toilet trips daily, once before lunch and once after. They are banned for the 30-minute period preceeding and following lunch breaks, Laviolette said.

"After that, the guys can just hold it — unless a foreman gives them special permission to use the toilet," he said.

Any toilet trips beyond the maximum two per day, he said, are to be allowed "only if a foreman decides it's really serious and necessary.

"I don't know how the foreman is supposed to do that, especially with the women employees," Laviolette said.

Company officials sought for comment on the dispute were unavailable at a variety of meetings.

Even the daily toilet trips can be cancelled unless an employee can find a fellow worker to replace him or her at work, Laviolette said.

Tightening the rules still further, the company Tuesday installed supervisors in washrooms to list names of employees using the washrooms and to time the period spent there.

Reading from a company statement on the new rules, Laviolette quoted it as noting that employees were free to use the toilets before and after their shifts ended.

Laviolette vowed the employees would not be daunted by the new rules and would battle for enforcement of contract language allowing employees to use toilets "as quickly as possible" when necessary.

Picnic Off, 200 Stage Prison Riot

NORCO, Calif. (AP) — About 200 rioting women prisoners protesting the cancellation of a weekend family picnic at the California Institute for Women at Frontera were brought under control Tuesday night with "no major injuries," prison officials said.

A spokesman at the prison, about 45 miles east of downtown Los Angeles, said a violent disturbance erupted about 7 p.m.

The women set a number of small fires, smashed numerous windows and broke furniture, the spokesman said. No hostages were taken and neither staff nor residents suffered major injuries.

The facility houses a total of 750 women.

It houses four women of the "family" of convicted mass murder Charles Manson, but the women—Susan Atkins, Leslie Van Houten, Patricia Krenwinkel and Mary Brunner—are not kept in the area involved in the disturbance, the spokesman said.

Just One U.S. Congressman At Joint Investment Probe

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Only one congressman showed up Tuesday for what was supposed to have been a joint Senate House of Representatives look into Canadian foreign investment screening procedures.

Only the acting chairman of the joint economic subcommittee on inter-American economic relationships — Representative Gillis Long was there to face three invited Canadians and one American.

A follow-up session scheduled today was postponed indefinitely.

Long was told that the typical Canadian nationalist is "an unmarried lady, below the age of 25, who lives in British Columbia and votes for the New Democratic Party."

The Canadians who came were Roy Bennett, president of Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd.; Stephen Clarkson, professor of political science, University of Toronto; and Alex Murray, professor of business administration of the University of Windsor.

The lone American, who hadn't been scheduled until the follow-up session, was John Petty, chairman of the U.S.-Canada committee of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

It was Murray, in a humorous aside, who gave the description of the typical Canadian nationalist.

Clarkson told Long that "bit by bit, a more independent attitude is being taken in Canada on issues which affect Canada-U.S. relations."

He added in a paper submitted Tuesday that Canadians are entering a "new stage of national consciousness" in which they realize U.S. domination of their economy "is inconsistent with Canada's political survival."

Clarkson's contention that economic nationalism is a growing trend in Canada, was disputed by Murray of the University of Windsor.

"Concern over the role of American companies in Canada is dropping off," said Murray.

He noted that there is a "close relationship between unemployment and Canadian nationalism."

Kitimat Snubbing Wage Guidelines

TORONTO (CP) — Federal anti-inflation guidelines will be ignored in contract bargaining by the 1,800 employees of the Aluminum Company of Canada Ltd. (Alcan) in Kitimat, the United Steelworkers of America said Tuesday.

In a statement issued by the Co-ordinating Council of Alcan, Ontario locals, the union said the anti-inflation board's decision to apply the guidelines to the Kitimat workers has no legal bearing on negotiations.

The statement said the legislation does not entitle the board to even listen to union and company proposals before an agreement is signed.

Alcan is one of the few companies in the world with sales of more than $1 billion annually, the statement said, and the company had a 72-per-cent increase in profits last year.

It said imposition of the guidelines would result in Kitimat workers earning less than Alcan workers in Vancouver.

The Steelworkers' Alcan council represents Alcan workers in Toronto, Kingston, Bracebridge and Aurora, Ont., as well as in Kitimat and Vancouver.

Library Accord 'Down to Wire'

The four core municipal councils "have to come to some agreement" soon if the Greater Victoria library board is to take advantage of the provincial government's offer of $250,000.

Otherwise, library board chairman Gordon Hutcheson said Tuesday, "I'm rather concerned that library services will be seriously damaged."

Councils and the board have to get an agreement signed by Jan. 31, 1976, and "it's my hope to get all the mayors together sometime early in January to settle the point once, and for all. We're down to the wire on this."

The Library Development Commission has indicated it will increase library grants from five per cent funding to 20 per cent if the service becomes a capital region function," but not all municipal councils are happy about it," Hutcheson told a library board meeting Tuesday

Under the proposal, the agency would continue to be administered by a locally appointed board of trustees and operating costs would be formulated on a property assessment basis, rather than the current per capita formula.

Hutcheson said Saanich has indicated it is not happy with the cost-sharing basis as it exists, "and if they were to pull out, then we would have a problem.

"The system will recede instead of advance and at least one municipality may go on to establish its own library."

The existing cost-sharing agreement terminates Dec. 31.

"For two years," said Hutcheson, "the board has attempted to negotiate a satisfactory cost-sharing arrangement to obtain additional funds from the provincial government.

"However the hour of decision has arrived and a resolution of their problem is required immediately."

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Paul Joseph Desjarlais, 30, serving one year for an escape from William Head, faced five more counts in provincial court Tuesday.

He was charged with unlawful confinement of Colin and April McKenna, 4611 William Head, a break-in and theft at their home, a break-in with intent at 4645 William Head, theft of a boat and theft of tools owned by Pearson College.

Judge D. K. McAdam adjourned all charges one week for further hearings at the request of defence lawyer David Wilson. Desjarlais had been serving an eight-year term when he escaped. All sentences arising out of his escape must be served before he completes the eight-year term.

Leslie James Green, 22, was sentenced to 15 days in jail after pleading guilty to shoplifting clothing worth $48.93 Oct. 29 from three downtown stores. The sentence will be added to one year already ordered Nov. 14 in Nanaimo for breaking and entering.

IPOH, Malaysia (Reuter) — Troops have uncovered enough food buried by Communists in the northern jungles of Malaysia to last three years.

MURDER TO SAVE HER CHILDREN

TACOMA (AP) — Confronted with a courtroom full of weeping spectators, a Pierce County superior court judge pronounced a five-year deferred prison sentence Tuesday for a woman convicted of murdering her husband.

Defence counsel had told the court that the slaying of Donald Murphy June 20 was not murder, "but the last desperate effort of a mother to save her children from a brutal beating with a rubber hose."

Judge Donald Thompson granted the deferred sentence on condition that Lea Geneal Murphy serve six months at a community centre that functions as an alternative to imprisonment.

A crowd of well-wishers surrounded Mrs. Murphy after sentence was passed. She had pleaded guilty to second-degree murder. Murphy was shot five times with a .38-calibre revolver.

A petition signed by 150 Eatonville neighbors of Mrs. Murphy urged leniency by the court, and the courtroom crowd overflowed into the lobby.

In passing the sentence, the judge said the case was one that "tears the judicial system down the middle."

Coastal Ferry Leaves on Emergency Grocery Run

VANCOUVER (CP) — Coast Ferries Ltd.'s Seymour Princess sailed late Tuesday on an emergency run to bring groceries and supplies to small communities along the B.C. coast.

Company president Wilaim New said the voyage "is a gesture in the spirit of Christmas" but it is not to be taken as a guarantee that service will be reinstated.

Coast Ferries had suspended its weekly freight service on Dec. 1 to the more than 100 Isolated communities dotted along the coast, saying the service is no longer economic.

Many of the communities have been short of food for over two weeks.

The company is presently appealing to the federal government for a subsidy to operate the service.

A decision is expected from Ottawa on Thursday, New said.

Amid all the colored lights and tinsel excitement of the holiday preparations, let us keep in mind the purpose of this joyful occasion and give some thought to the One whose birthday we are preparing to celebrate. Remember that although He lived a very short life span, in an obscure manner, in a sparsely populated area, He did more than all the great rulers of the world combined to change the course of its history. Honor the birthday of the Son of God by attending Christmas services at the Church of your choice; and learn to follow His teachings there every Sunday.

$100M Loan

B.C. Hydro has borrowed $100 million from Saudi Arabian sources, Hydro chairman Jim Rhodes announced today.

The transaction was arranged through Credit Suisse White Weld Ltd., underwriters in London, England, and the deal was closed Tuesday in London.

The Times learned of the loan Tuesday, but Rhodes, Finance Minister Dave Stupich and Premier Barrett all refused comment at the time.

It was uncertain until today whether the deal would go through in the light of the NDP defeat last week. Hydro previously arranged two $100 million loans from Arab sources and Social Credit leader Bill Bennett was highly critical of the overseas deals.

Bennett could not be contacted today for comment on the now-complete deal, and Socred party leader Peter Hyndman said the premier-elect will not make any comment until the new cabinet is sworn in and the new government has made a review of the financial status of the province.

The funds, in Canadian currency, have now been received from the Saudi Arabian sources, through the London underwriters, Rhodes said. The Arab country responsible for the previous bond issues was not revealed.

Rhodes said the proceeds of the new bond issue will be added to Hydro's general funds and used to finance a portion of its capital expenditure program.

Rate for the bond issue is 9¾ per cent with interest payable semi-annually. The first $50 million is due Dec. 16, 1980 and the remaining $50 million is due Dec. 16, 1981.

B.C. Hydro first borrowed $100 million in petrodollars last December. The deal was handled through the First Boston Corp. of New York and part of the agreement stipulated the identity of the Arab nation was to be kept secret.

In February the provincial government negotiated another $100 million bond sale on the offshore market.

WONNACOTT

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Eight of 10 inmates are still on the loose after the biggest jail break in Victoria's history Tuesday night.

The 10 — awaiting trial on various charges — presumably used their bare hands to pry open two bars at Wilkinson Road jail before crawling through a 10-inch by 18-inch hole and dropping 15 feet to the ground.

The window, in the jail's east wing, is believed to have been the same one from which 19-year-old Danny Cain escaped last Spring.

Two of the escapers were caught two hours after the breakout discovered by guards at 10:40 p.m. They have been identified as Donald William Thomson, 42, and Kenneth Moorhouse, 28, and were to appear in Victoria provincial court this afternoon.

Six of the inmates still at large are known drug users and four are considered dangerous. Police warn the fugitives will probably try to get armed.

"We're bracing for another wave of crime," moaned one Victoria police officer. "Someone's going to get seriously hurt by all these people escaping from jail."

Hal McGillivray, director of the provincial corrections on Vancouver Island said the escape points out as never before the need for a new remand centre.

He said the present building, built before the First World War is too old, too decrepid to provide the kind of security needed. "Even the concrete is starting to crumble in this place," he said.

Meanwhile police on Vancouver Island have mounted one of the largest searches ever for the prisoners still at large: Larry Alan Preston, 32, Gerald Paul Ritchie, 29, William Paul Murray, 27, Lawrence Stanley Shisler, 31, Tom Edward Wonnacott, 28, Glen John Glowa, 27, Peter George MacLean, 24, and William Harold Mack, 26. All were wearing green prison garb when last seen.

Preston and MacLean were awaiting trial on charges of breaking and entering, Ritchie for theft, Murray for drug conspiracy, Shisler and

FRENCH-ONLY FACE PENALTY

OTTAWA (CP) — Treasury Board President Jean Chretien told reporters Tuesday that bilingual civil servants in Quebec who refuse to serve taxpayers in English and French will be penalized. He did not elaborate.

Chretien was commenting on reports that 25,000 Quebec members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada plan to refuse to speak English starting Jan. 2 to press demands for a seven-per-cent bonus to civil servants required to work in both languages.

"The public is entitled to receive their services in the two official languages," he said.

Squeaky Gets Life

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme today was sentenced to life in prison for attempting to assassinate President Ford.

U.S. district court judge Thomas Macbride handed down the maximum sentence after rejecting motions by her defence attorney for a new trial.

Miss Fromme, a devoted apostle of imprisoned mass killer Charles Manson, is the first person convicted and sentenced under a 1965 federal law of attempting to murder a president of the United States.

Miss Fromme screamed and shouted at Macbride before he pronounced the sentence and hit U.S. attorney Dwayne Keyes with an apple. She shouted as marshals carried her bodily out of the courtroom.

MacBride told Miss Fromme that he had searched in vain for any mitigating circumstances under which he could ease the sentence.

LONGER TERM FOR CURBS?

TORONTO (CP) — The CBC says it has learned the federal government's anti-inflation legislation may remain in effect longer than the originally-announced three-year period.

The CBC, which does not indicate how long the controls will be effective, also says the program will be more complex than originally planned.

Details of the program are to be announced Thursday night in the Commons by Prime Minister Trudeau.

Bennett, Barrett Talk

B.C.'s new premier met the outgoing premier for about 30 minutes Tuesday in preparation for Monday morning's transfer of power.

Premier Barrett said the meeting was "frank and fruitful" and the two leaders exchanged opinions.

Asked if they offered each other any advice, Barrett said: "No, we each have our own problems."

Earlier, premier-elect Bill Bennett was seen emerging from the meeting but asked by reporters if he had met Barrett yet he said only that he had met the premier several times since 1973.

Bennett had no comments for reporters other than to say a member of his cabinet will go to Ottawa to discuss the anti-inflation program and the ramifications in B.C.

He said notices of ICBC premium increases would be delayed until the new cabinet had time to study them. The outgoing NDP cabinet was to give final approval to the rate increases this week but postponed approval pending transfer of the government.

The NDP caucus — new members as well as some of the defeated MLAs met for two hours during the afternoon to discuss administrative details.

Barrett gave reporters little clue of what happened at the meeting except to say the MLAs had tidied up their restaurant bills.

His leadership was not disussed, he said, adding that he will make no decision on his future until the final outcome of Coquitlam race is known.

Barrett now trails Socred George Kerster by 117 votes but there is a chance the outcome could be changed with a recount and the additon of section 80 votes (from people not on the voters' lists).

Asked if the meeting was bitter, Barrett said "certainly not, it was all NDPers."

Barrett is expected to submit his government's resignation to Lieutenant-Governor Walter Owen at 10 a.m. Monday.

Bennett has already picked his cabinet ministers but won't name them until they are sworn in Monday, which is customary.

PWA Chief Watson Rejects Two Top Air Canada Jobs

VANCOUVER (CP) — Donald Watson, president and chief executive officer of Pacific Western Airlines, said Tuesday that he turned down an offer to take either of the two top jobs at Air Canada.

Watson said he had sent a telegram to transport minister Otto Lang pointing out his reasons for turning down an offer Lang had made to him Dec. 10 in Ottawa.

The telegram said Watson had compelling reasons to refuse both jobs — chairman of the board or president and chief executive officer.

Yves Pratte, one of two men rapped Dec. 8 by Chief Justice Willard Estey of the Supreme Court of Ontario in his 312-page report on Air Canada, resigned as chairman of the publicly-owned airline Nov. 28.

"One never expects such an opportunity and only a few ever receive it," Watson said.

"The decision process would have been simplified had there been any doubt in my mind about my ability to make that substantial contribuiton.

Watson is a long-term airline career man, having been with PWA for 18 years, the last five as president and chief executive officer.

"The entire air transportation industry is very fragile and is enduring turbulent times," Watson also said in the telegram.

"I see little relenting in that atmosphere for the next several years . . . I must forego further consideration of one of the greatest opportunities ever afforded anyone, to remain with Pacific Western."

WORKERS SAY RATS TO SMELL OF CATS

LIVERPOOL, England (Reuter) — About 600 men at an automobile factory here were made idle today because of the smell of stray cats.

The dispute at the factory, which makes British Leyland's best-selling export sports car, the Triumph Bullet, began on Monday when 21 workers complained about the smell of cats around the plant.

Cleaners scrubbed the floor —but the men protested it was still wet and dangerous to work on.

The 21 began a strike when the management refused their demand to be paid for time lost while the floor dried.

So far 600 have been laid off, and there is fear that unless the strike is settled soon it will halt all production at the factory.

Rosy Glint Seen For '76 Economy

PARIS (CP) — Canada's economy will likely resume real growth next year and the annual inflation rate may drop, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development forecast today.

At the same time economic growth in the Western world may show a moderate advance after an over-all 1975 decline, though the growth trend may falter later in the year, the OECD said.

Issuing a series of reports, the Paris-based consultative body said the Canadian government's anti-inflation package is likely to have little impact on national growth next year.

The Canadian Gross National Product is estimated to increase by 4.25 per cent next year after declining by an estimated one per cent this year.

Inflation for the whole of 1976 may average 9.25 per cent, compared with 11 per cent for 1975 though the 1976 forecast would be slightly higher than the nine per cent for the second half of this year.

Canadian fixed investment is expected to rise three per cent in 1976, after increasing by one per cent this year. House building, which dropped by 16.25 per cent this year, is estimated to rise by 11.5 per cent next year.

But private consumption will probably only grow about 3.75 per cent because of consumer fears over unemployment, the OECD said.

Canadian foreign trade is expected to show a surplus next year of $750 million, compared with this year's deficit of $950 million. This would leave Canada with a 1976 current account deficit of $3.7 billion.

Ottawa Set to Study Battered Baby Cases

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government is prepared to spend money and time on research to define child abuse and prevent it from spreading, Health Minister Marc Lalonde and Solicitor-General Warren Allmand said Tuesday.

But before any definite pledges are made, they said, the facts have to be gathered.

Both Mr. Allmand and Mr. Lalonde told the Commons health and welfare committee they have some possible answers but each cited contradictory studies, inadequate research and the fear and ignorance of the public as major obstacles to overcome.

Saying it is difficult to define child abuse and separate it from child neglect or battering, Mr. Lalonde said that 68,000 children in the custody of welfare officials in Canada as of June, 1975 were victims of neglect—wilful or unintentional maltreatment.

He said that in 1973-74, the number of abused or battered children in Canada totalled 1,085. In legal terms abuse usually includes physical attack, severe discipline such as lengthy solitary confinement, the deprivation of basic needs like food, or any other action that could cause physical or mental damage to a child.

Battering usually means intentional physical harm, he said.

Mr. Allmand expanded those definitions to include sexual abuse and noted that Mr. Lalonde's figures included only reported cases.

"Conservative estimates of the actual number of cases in Canada put the figure between 3,000 and 4,000 per year," he said.

Both cited the need for a strong reporting system under which people would not be afraid to report cases of child abuse.

In most provinces, such reporting is mandatory. But people still unjustly fear legal reprisals, unpleasant involvement in legal action or damaging personal or professional relationships, he said.

"Child abuse is a criminal act by anybody's definition," Mr. Allmand said in a brief to the committee, but both ministers said changes to the Criminal Code would not put an end to it.

Mr. Allmand cited section 43 of the Criminal Code which allows schoolteachers, parents or persons replacing parents to use force to discipline a child "if the force does not exceed what is reasonable under the circumstances."

Mr. Allmand said up to Nov. 30 of this year, 590 such

Eng Tries Again For Golf Course On Valley Land

LONEY
. . . new role

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Businessman Henry Eng, for the second time, has applied to Saanich to have 20.6 acres of controversial farmland in the Blenkinsop Valley turned into a golf course.

Eng plans to build a golf-driving range, nine-hole golf course, a pro shop and coffee bar. There will be parking for 60 cars.

Former Saanich municipal planner Tom Loney is acting for Eng.

At Tuesday's meeting of the council's lands, planning and housing department, Loney's request to have Eng's rezoning fees reduced was granted.

While in office, Loney had recommended rezoning fees be charged to cover costs of processing by municipal staff at a rate of $4 per 1,000 square feet of land. Eng's fee, at this rate, would be $3,604.

Loney's successor, Gil Laurenson, told the committee the fee structure, set by Loney, was intended to cover processing costs and "discourage frivolous applications."

Because Eng's proposal would see the land being used as "both a commercial venture and as open space," Laurenson recommended the fee be reduced to $300, plus an additional $150 if a public hearing is called.

The committee will recommend to council that this be done.

Loney was municipal planner when, in 1967, Eng applied to build a 22-acre miniature golf course and driving range on his property at 4090 Blenkinsop Road.

At that time council decided no development should be allowed that might mar the rural charm of the only extensive farming area in Greater Victoria.

Loney was ordered to prepare a study on the Blenkinsop Valley. This was completed in 1969.

Residents who attended the public hearing on the 1967 application expressed concern over the traffic the project would generate on a road that already had a bad record of traffic fatalities.

Council was told Eng proposed to strip off the top soil, cover the exposed area with hog fuel and apply a top layer of soil.

Residents complained that raising the level of the land would intensify the fall, winter and spring flooding on their properties.

Eng's second application was filed only days after work, ordered during an in-camera meeting of the environment committee on Aug. 18, was completed. At a cost of between $35,000 and $40,000, rock has been blasted and the channel from Blenkinsop Lake deepened to allow swifter runoffs. Eng and other property-owners attended that meeting.

The same meeting also recommended that a weir be built to ensure control of the water flow and prevent the drying-out of farmland during the warm weather.

This has yet to be done.

Municipal engineer Cliff Warren says this should be built next February or March.

Nurse School Cash Needed Quickly—RNs

The Registered Nurses Association of B.C. is urging the provincial government to commit funds for a school of nursing at the University of Victoria — and the university is assuming it will.

But for eight years now the school for advanced training of registered nurses has suffered from a congenital ailment — no money.

In a statement to government and university, the RNABC says a province-wide shortage of nurses with higher education cannot be met by the only existing school at the University of British Columbia.

"No matter how much money is spent on buildings and equipment, or how many technological advances are introduced, the standard of health care in British Columbia will not improve unless the individual delivering that care possesses the necessary knowledge and skills," says the RNABC brief.

Nurses provide 65 per cent of the health care work force but are not being prepared in sufficient numbers to provide more than basic nursing care.

The association says that 20 per cent of the province's 17,500 registered nurses live on Vancouver Island and the planned nursing school at UVic "will provide them with the opportunity to obtain advanced preparation — if the school receives the necessary support of the university and the provincial government."

Joseph Cunliffe, chairman of UVic's board of governors, said Tuesday that while the university does not have any assurance of a budget for the school from the province, it is assuming it will get funds and planning on that basis.

The nursing school was first launched in the fall of 1968 but folded before the academic year was out because money from the province was not forthcoming.

It was scheduled to open again last fall but the opening has been delayed another year for lack of funds. A director has already been hired and there have been over 500 inquiries.

Jaw Surgery For Victim Of Beating

A 32-year-old man, victim of a savage beating and presumed robbery in downtown Victoria Monday night, remains in fair condition in Victoria General Hospital.

Terry Quocksister of 1526 Pandora was attacked by two youths as he left the Elks Club on Cormorant at about 10:19 p.m.

Victoria police S. Sgt. Gordon Bennett said his officers have still not been able to interview Quocksister who was operated on for a broken jaw on Tuesday.

'I sell to some very prominent people, you know,' says Al Young

Squaredancer Faced the Music For Lottery-Loving Americans

in the tiny cluttered room he rents at the top of the stairs of an old house on Herbert Street in Duncan sits Albert Phillip Young.

He is home now. The orderal is over. And he is glad.

And when you go there, he comes to the door to meet you resplendent in plaid pants, bright red and white shirt and a western-style necktie.

He wears a great smile and runs a hand through his prickly silver hair that looks rather like a grey bush.

"Hi," he said enthusiastically, glancing at my camera. "I put on my square dance shirt for the picture."

"Come in, sit down," he says, and quickly adds that his freinds call him Al.

And so you clear a space on the bed and squeeze in there between a pile of papers and a cat with no name who lies sleeping in an empty old Presto-Log carton. And you listen while Al tells what it was like to be arrested and spend 25 days in a jail cell in Port Angeles for selling Canadian lottery tickets in the United States.

Al, tall and fit and looking much younger than his 61 years, leads an energetic life. He swims a lot, goes hiking and camping, doesn't smoke or drink, and is a real square dance buff.

Once a member of the now-defunct Victoria Swinging Singles Club, Al still sports his "Swinging Singles" belt and proudly says he's attended the B.C. square dance jamboree at Penticton for the last seven years and the Washington State square dance festival for the last six years.

In Canada, Al is a registered lottery ticket seller. He subsidizes his Royal Canadian Air Force pension by buying potatoes from a farmer near here and selling them, and by selling Western Canada Lottery and Olympic Lottery tickets.

Because of his square-dance activities, Al has many contacts in the States and, he says, they take a lot of interest in Canadian lotteries.

"The Americans hear all about it on TV and radio and are eager to buy the tickets," Al says.

Washington State law, however, forbids gambling and, as well, U.S. Customs regulations prohibit importation of lottery tickets.

To Al, this seems hardly fair and he says they are "picking on" a senior Second World War RCAF veteran living on a small pension.

He points out that profits from the Western Canada Lottery go to promotion of sports, culture and recreation and shouldn't be considered professional gambling. And he hits at the "Lucky Number Sweepstakes" operating each week in Seattle papers.

"Are the Seattle newspapers too powerful to take action against?" he asks. "Is it much easier to pick on a senior war veteran from Canada?"

On his last ill-fated trip, Al had been in the States for three days and had sold almost 100 of the $3 Western Canada tickets (which carry two first prizes of $250,000) and "a few" of the $10 Olympic Lottery tickets (which offer three first prizes of $1 million each).

Not long before he was due to come back to Vancouver Island, Al was trying to sell

max low

a ticket to a garage owner in Sequim about 30 miles east of Port Angeles.

A plainclothes policeman overheard the transaction and at first just warned Al and told him to get out of town. But he had to wait for a bus to get back to Port Angeles and while he was walking around waiting, the policeman pulled up again and said he'd received a complaint and would have to take him in.

Bail was set at $1,0000 but Al stayed in jail 25 days before arranging with a friend in Victoria to post it.

"I didn't think there was anything awfully bad about the jail," he says. "But I don't smoke and the worst thing was being in a small cell with five others who did."

After the 25 days, Al was released on bail and returned here. A few days later he had to go back to appear in court. He received a 25-day sentence (which he had already served, of course) and a deferred fine of $500, substantially less than the maximum $100,000 or five years in jail the offence carries.

"I kind of felt they wouldn't be too hard on me," he says. "They all seemed sorry this had happened."

Born in Nova Scotia, he joined the RACF and served between 1939 and 1945 in Alaska and down the west coast as a motor-boat crewman.

He was a construction worker in Victoria for some time and later took up freelance photography.

Al's freelance work was photography with a difference.

He joined the Sol Sante (Sun Health) Club for nudists at Shawnigan Lake, became treasurer and a member of the board of directors. There he took his photographs and sent them to magazines all over the U.S. and Canada — mainly to a now-extinct publication in Toronto called Sunbathing for Health.

And Al pauses and whips out an old card showing the name of his Nudist Foto Service with the words "Nudist Advancement by Photography."

Trouble was, though, the nudists at Shawnigan Lake weren't too excited about being "advanced." They felt they were suffering from a bit of overexposure and, after a few squabbles, forced Al to leave — and take his camera with him. That was 15 years ago.

What of the Americans who have bought lottery tickets from him?

"Well at first the officials told me that they were as guilty as I am," he says. "But, as there were so many, they later told me the people could keep their tickets and claim their prizes if they won. I've kept all the names and telephone numbers and I ring people if they win."

Oh yes, Al knew what he was doing was illegal.

"I sell to some very prominent people you know," he says. "And I thought it was just like the Irish Sweepstakes in Canada — it's not legal to sell Irish tickets openly and yet they publish the results."

And would he do it again?

"Oh no," he says quickly. "I wouldn't go over with tickets again."

But then there's a sudden twinkle in his eye.

"But I might send them over by mail order . . . if they write to me for them."

ASK THE TIMES

Q. Who was Jack Miner?—B.I.

A. Miner was a Canadian bird conservationist who developed a bird sanctuary on his farm at Kingsville, Ontario. He died in 1944. Friends established in 1931 the Jack Miner Migratory Bird Foundation to help him continue his work on the migratory habits of birds.

Ask the Times wishes to explain a correct but misleading answer given last Saturday regarding the bittersweet and its relation to deadly nightshade. A form of nightshade is called bittersweet, but the better known bittersweet is a woody vine (celastrus) which grows wild in eastern Canada and the U.S., and is quite unrelated to the toxic nightshade (solanum). We are grateful to W. H. W. for suggesting the value of using scientific names rather than common names which are applied to many different kinds of plants.

Candidates Line Up To Replace Bawlf

Victoria MLA-elect Sam Bawlf said today he will resign from city council Dec. 31 and that a byelection will likely be held in late February.

Three candidates, including defeated mayoralty candidate Henry Bitterman, have announced they will seek the post vacated by Bawlf.

Bawlf said the date for his resignation was chosen after discussion Tuesday with Mayor-elect Mike Young.

Bawlf was mid-way through his second term on council when he won a seat in the provincial legislature in the Dec. 11 Socred sweep.

He said his term on council was "a productive three years in which the future was stabilized for the residential neighborhoods of Vic West, James Bay and Fernwood.

"I feel sure the pattern will ensure that city neighborhoods continue to be liveable," Bawlf said, adding "preservation of the city's heritage buildings also are well-in-hand."

The 31-year-old developer plans to "wind up" his business affairs to become a full-time MLA in the new year, he said.

He said the planning of the city is "light years" ahead of its status three years ago and "it remains now for the city finances to catch up with current pressure.

"Hopefully we'll accomplish an enlighted dialogue between the city and the province in terms of revenue sharing generally and property taxes for provincial buildings."

City clerk Morran Waller has estimated by byelection will cost about $5,000 including $2,300 for preparation of a new voters list.

He has stated he'll recommend that closing date for nominations be set by Feb. 15, likely Feb. 8, and under terms of the Municipal Act the byelection is held the third following Saturday.

Meanwhile, Bitterman, 35, a realtor, is the third person to announce his candidacy in the byelection. The other two are Bill McElroy, a substitute teacher who placed third in the mayoralty election Nov. 15, and appraiser John Hayes, highest runner-up in the aldermanic election.

This will be Bitterman's fourth attempt to get on council. He's run once for mayor and twice for alderman. In the Nov. 15 election he came second with 791 votes to Mayor-elect Young, who swept to victory with 7,682 votes.

Heritage Guardian Wins Award

Victoria architect Peter Cotton has been awarded the Hallmark Society's special award for his 20-year contribution to heritage preservation in Victoria.

Hallmark president Don Reksten said Cotton has been a tireless champion of heritage preservation and an outspoken critic of wasteful demolition.

"Looking back through old newspaper files it is almost impossible to find a heritage building facing demolition that didn't have Peter Cotton standing in front of it pleading for its preservation," Reksten said.

Cotton is the former president of the Greater Victoria Historical Buildings Foundation and now serves as chairman of the city's Heritage Advisory Committee.

Norwich Union's award winner

His architectural work includes restoration of Emily Carr House, the Law Chambers, the Counting House and Craigflower Manor.

Cotton's award and the other annual Hallmark awards are to be presented at a Christmas meeting of the Society later today.

The communications award will be presented to Cecil Clark for "keeping the past part of the present" through his photographs and his book, "Yesterday and Today."

Two companies and one individual will receive commercial awards for preservation of heritage buidings.

Labatt Breweries was given the award for the restoration of its Government Street operation which was built in 1896 to house the Victoria Brewing and Ice Co.

The restoration was undertaken because of "the sheer enjoyment of doing something unique and lasting," a company spokesman said.

The Norwich Union Life Insurance Society will also receive a commercial award for its heritage building at 1162 Fort Street.

Reksten said the restoration of the building which was constructed in 1906 for Thomas Paterson who later served as lieutenant-governor, is a "perfect example of how company expansion and community interests can go hand in hand."

William C. McKechnie won the individual commercial award for restoration of Chandler House, in James Bay, as a restaurant.

The house was built in 1884 by the Hudson's Bay Co. for Factor John Chandler.

105 OPERATORS READY FOR CALLS

B.C. Telephone is expecting 70,000 long distance call attempts by Victoria customers on Christmas Day and will have 105 long distance operators handling the calls.

District customer service manager Bert Parker said today he recommends that customers try to space their calls over a few days before and after Christmas Day to avoid delays caused by the heavy volume.

"We also suggest people planning long distance calls obtain the area code and the number in advance, thus reducing delays in peak calling periods," Parker said.

On a province-wide basis, B.C. Tel will have more than 2,000 operators at work on Christmas day to handle the estimated 173,500 operator-dialled long distance calls and the expected 655,000-direct dialled calls. The estimates are up 32 per cent over last year.

Happy, Healthy Holiday Season

TINY TIPS

1. Use juice from canned fruit to sweeten and flavour your fruit punch.
2. Serve smaller portions. Help your pocket book and your guests' figures at the same time!
3. When choosing crackers, for added nourishment choose whole grain crackers or those with seeds.
4. Serve fruit juices, fruit punch or egg nog to your young visitors rather than pop.
5. Make your Chrismas drinks more nourishing by using egg nog or fruit juices as a mixer.

Nancy Nutrition Says:

Appetizers

Want to start your next party off with a crunch! Serve a tray of colourful, crisp vegetables around a bowl of tangy dip! It's a conversation piece that starts both the conversation and the digestive juices flowing! The vegetables may be prepared in advance and stored in plastic bags in the refrigerator 'til just before your guests arrive. All you have to do is arrange them around your dip. Here are a few suggestions for 'dippers' . . . Raw Broccoli Spears, Green Pepper Sticks, Celery Sticks, Carrot Sticks, Cherry Tomatoes, Raw Mushrooms, Cucumber Sticks, Cauliflowerettes, Radish Roses, Zucchini Slices and Parsley.
